

NEW ORLEANS

... Queen of the Mississippi, cradle of jazz, home of the Mardi Gras, the Quarter, Bourbon Street, the Garden District and Tulane. The city has a magic charm for the new comer. But the wonder of the tourist wears off quickly and you never go to Bourbon Street except to play guide for parents and friends. A new New Orleans replaces the faded ideals of summer. There are urban slums, traffic problems, and a laughable municipal government. As you leave Tulane, New Orleans has a different meaning. But no one who has sailed on Lake Ponchartrain or walked a lazy sunset through the oaks in Audubon Park can leave without remembering a city with a strong and distinctive character that, for a brief period in a young life, was home.

IT WOULD be futile to attempt a description of the peculiar and personel collection of architecture, oaks, music and "where y'at" that has come to be called New Orleans. It's not so much a place as a state of mind, and each man has his own opinion, an opinion certain to be different from any other. We can only recall a few of the images that contribute to this potpourri with the understanding that you know the city better than anyone else.

There is the New Orleans of azaleas, streetcars, and the Garden District. This is the city most immediate to Tulane. Some say that it is an irrelevant Camelot, a retreat form reality, avoiding the important issues of the day, determined to be uninvolved with anything more remote than Napoleon Avenue. Perhaps it is, but every Tullanian knows the value of a quiet walk through Audubon Park after a particularly difficult examination; or what it is to ride a wood-creaking trolley speeding open windowed through an early spring evening.

THE city plies a tourist trade. There is the New Orleans of the Quarter and noise; one first seen, but when known, found shallow.

Curiosity brings you to the Jet and through the bush country to that mecca of madness. Here in one spot, as though through some peculiar conjunction of the planets, are found together the famous and venerable Grubby Hot Dog Venders with Dirty Aprons, Lynda Bridgette, and the world's largest stripper (378 pounds, dripping sweat).

The place is fun, but some find it tiring. The music is exciting, heard once, but when the "Saints" and "Basin Street Blues" become marketable commodities supplied on demand, a certain amount of spontaneity necessarily is lost.

A sometime place for fun, a full time place for some, but Mardi Gras comes apace and beer and wine and people and plastic beads are gathered by forces little understood. Play-drink-sing-enjoy, for tomorrow is Ash Wednesday and very far away.

THERE is another city. It is more difficult to find, hidden as it is between the glitter and light of the others, but it was there all the while. It does not demand attention, but it deserves it. There are people here, people worth knowing: the women in the French Market sorting onions at dawn; the shopkeepers along Prytania; the musicians who will play if they please and not one minute before.

This city is where the others were, but at different hours and in a different style. As you leave New Orleans you will remember the Quarter and the sparkle, but you will treasure the beret topped ancient who spoke with you one Sunday morning in Jackson Square about the days when . . .

Change is not unusual for this city. For all her tradition and mustiness, New Orleans changes daily as we learn of a part we overlooked yesterday and wonder what new discoveries lie hidden in tomorrow.

CIA- PROTEST MEETING-

For all those interested in protesting CIA operations at Tulane, there will be a meeting to decide on what will be done and how on Sunday (Oct. 2) at 4 p.m., in the 12 messroom (living room area). The actual protest, which will involve picketing, picketing, or whatever the Sunday meeting decides upon, will begin at 11 a.m. Monday, 2nd floor 12.

The meeting Sunday and the CIA protest are sponsored by "United Students for a Democratic Society," a non-nationally affiliated campus organization.

A YEAR of hope and a year of disappointment, but a year of interesting and exciting athletic contests at Tulane.

Returning students in September staggered out of fraternity rush week and orientation into the opening of the football season with hopes high and a prospective bowl bid waiting in November. The fans at the Saturday night games have changed a good deal since Coach Jim Pittman took over. Where once it was the fashion to use a football game as an excuse for a floor show and have a thousand private parties scheduled in the stands from eight to ten p.m., the average student now cares about the game, for it is a game worth caring about, not only for the team but for the university, for the prestige which surrounds a top football team rubs off on the school, and, for all the talk about the national reputation of Tulane, our prestige in sports circles is only fair, at best. This past year, disappointing losses to several weaker teams forced the Tulane fan to look forward to basketball which promised to be a real success after last year's 14-10 record. As was the story with football, the basketball team was overrated, suffered disappointing early losses and when Coach Ralph Pederson was replaced by Tom Nissalke in mid-season because of illness, a six-game losing streak greeted the frosh mentor before the team settled down and won seven of their last ten.

Seeming to follow the lead of the two major teams, most of the other varsity squads attained a high level of mediocrity, which, at this university anyway, is a distinct improvement over the recent teams in the minor sports.

The baseball team had its problems with a new coach and the loss of valuable veterans, but gave a creditable performance as they wait for this year's freshman and sophomores to develop. The track, golf and swimming teams did not set the world on fire, although several individuals came through with excellent performances so that the Green Wave was not humiliated in any instance.

The tennis team still possessed one of the strongest dual meet squads in the country, having an undefeated season, and when tournament time came around, they managed to hold on to ninth place in the country despite disappointing losses in several championship matches.

Individually, several outstanding stars have recently been developed at Tulane. First among them is of course Bobby Duhon, who was chosen as a pre-season All-American and, after completing a recordbreaking career at Tulane, signed with the New York Football Giants, who chose him in the third round of the draft.

In tennis, Turner Howard in singles and Lee Kantrow and Richard Carter in doubles were fighting for national championships last spring and Howard looks like a good bet to capture a major title before leaving Tulane.

Of the several Tulane baseball players signing contracts over the last two years, there is one who just might make the major leagues this summer. That is Bobby Darrah with the Yankees. This year Bobby is with Syracuse in the AAA International League and could be brought up towards the end of the season.

So there is hope. With the development of the young players and the help of the veterans, it seems that a winning tradition will reappear at Tulane, a tradition which should have reappeared this past year.

MIAMI (OHIO) AND NORTH CAROLINA

Above: Wingback Jimmy Trahan (29) runs over Miami's Dan Gerhardt on his way to a three yard pickup in the third quarter; Right: Trahan trips over full-back Tim Coughlin (35) for four yards this time as the Wave rolls forward toward the goal line in the first period; Below: Miami end Sid Steiner gets dragged down after an eleven yard pickup by Jim Jancik (14), John Snell (73), Lou Campomenosi (22), Bruce Guidry (39) and Maurice Gartman (38); Opposite, above: Uwe Pontius (56) kicks a first period field goal to start the Wave scoring in the biggest victory of the year; Opposite, middle: Strong end Sid Jones (88) pulls down a 13 yard Duhon pass as Tulane moves toward its first touchdown in the first period; Opposite, below: Tailback Wayne Francingues (10) goes over the Carolina line for three yards on the first touchdown march.

IN the first encounter of the 1967 season, the Green Wave took on the once defeated Miami of Ohio Redskins at Tulane Stadium. Tulane won the toss, took the opening kickoff, and drove down to the Redskins 22 yard line. At this point, the offense bogged down, but on fourth down, Uwe Pontius kicked a 22 yard field goal and the Green Wave led 3-0. Although this drive seemed to indicate that the Wave could move at will against the Redskins, never again could Bobby Duhon bring Tulane near the goal line. Miami, led by quarterback Kent Thompson and powerful, quick running backs, pushed across the Greenie goal line once in each half and took home a 14-3 victory. This was a disappointing season opener for the Wave, which was looking forward to a quick start after their fine showing in 1966. But the team had little time to dwell on this loss as they had to start preparation for the first road trip of the year a week later against North Carolina.

The Green Wave bounced back smartly from the Miami defeat by rolling over the North Carolina Tarheels 36-11 at Chapel Hill in front of a local New Orleans television audience. Tulane piled up more than 250 yards on the ground and 336 overall, plus five touchdowns, in completely outclassing the Atlantic Coast Conference Tarheels. Uwe Pontius once again drew first blood when he kicked a 28 yard field goal early in the first period. The Geeniees then put the game out of reach when Jimmy Trahan scored the first touchdown of the year, preceding scores by Sid Jones, Chuck Loftin, Jim Darnley and a beautiful touchdown run by linebacker Bruce Guidry after an N.C. punt which was blocked by Scott Haber. Late in the third quarter, North Carolina began to show some sort of offense, but by this time the game was out of reach and the Wave came away with its first win of the season and the promise of many more to follow.

These first two games provided a startling contrast which was to characterize the football fortunes of the Tulane Green Wave throughout the season. Time and again, the Wave faltered when favored, as they surely did against Miami of Ohio, and, when prospects often indicated either an even game or a possible loss, they rose to heights many thought them incapable of obtaining. But foresight is not an outstanding characteristic of most people connected with sports, and Tulane looked forward to Miami of Florida with a great deal of confidence.

MIAMI AND FLORIDA

Above: Bobby Duhon gets pushed back from the Miami goal line in the third quarter as the final hope for a Wave comeback is crushed; Right: Soaking wet and dirty, Tulane's front line of Guidry (39), Browning (74), Eumont (63), Hardnett (69), Gartman (37) and Dembinski (72) wait for the Miami offense in the fourth period; Opposite, left: Running an option play around Florida's left end, quarterback Warren Bankston goes for seven yards early in the second quarter; Opposite, right: Nothing could be more typical of the Florida game than this fumble by Bankston, recovered by Gator Jackie Alltmont (27), for Tulane was unable to do anything quite right the whole game; Opposite, below: The Florida line opens a huge hole as All-S.E.C. fullback Larry Smith sweeps past McAfee (38) and Eumont (63) for a touchdown in the 35-0 rout.

THE Wave in a valiant effort, held the strong Miami Hurricanes for thirty minutes before falling in a rain-soaked game played in the Orange Bowl. The first half was marked by brilliant play by the Green Wave defense and quarterback Bobby Duhon made sure that it was not in vain as he led the Greenies down the field for two touchdowns, scoring both of them himself on runs of seven and 27 yards. Uwe Pontius capped both drives with extra points and Tulane took a 14-7 lead into the dressing room at halftime. With the opening of the second half came the rain, and the Hurricanes seemed to be revitalized by the wet conditions as they started to move the ball consistently both on the ground and in the air. Their great depth was a big factor. They never seemed to run out of fresh players to put in against the tiring Wave and proceeded to add 27 points to make the final score 34-14. Tulane showed, however, that they could handle a talented, bigger team, but the Miami depth and the rain combined to run the Wave's record to 1-2.

In its fourth outing of the year, the Green Wave was overpowered 35-0 by a stronger and larger University of Florida team at Tulane Stadium. All night long Florida's substitute quarterback Larry Rentz guided the Gators through the porous Tulane defense. The only high points of the game were the two punts blocked by defensive end Scott Haber and the punting of Lloyd Pye. The team did not seem to possess the fire which was needed to successfully combat the Gators, and Florida, aided by the psychological lift of finding a competent quarterback to replace injured Jackie Eckdahl, simply overwhelmed the Wave. On Florida's first play from scrimmage, Tulane was called for interference with the Gator's all-SEC end Richard Trapp and as a result they netted 43 yards. From that point on, Florida was in completed control of the game. Tulane was unable to muster enough steam for a sustained drive and the defense was not able to contain the strong Gator offense.

Brody as Tulane marches toward it's first touchdown of the homecoming clash.

A favored Tulane team fell to Air Force in the Green Wave's opening game of its "second season." Air Force was the first to score on a 26 yard pass play. Neither team was then able to score until the third quarter, when Chuck Loftin dove over the goal line from the one yard line and Uwe Pontius kicked the PAT. Later in the third quarter Pontius kicked a 19 yard field goal which put the Wave ahead 10-7. Air Force then drove down twice deep into Tulane territory and kicked field goals on both occasions to put the game away 13-10. Even though Tulane jumped out to an early lead, the Falcons, taking advantage of the Greenies' vulnerable middle, piled up huge gains on the ground and ran for a total of 217 yards. Bobby Hudon and Jim Yarter on offense and Scott Haber and Ernie Parker on defense again played fine ball, but the teams could not make the big play to save the win.

Fired up for homecoming, the Green Wave downed the Yellow Jackets of Georgia Tech, 23-12. The Wave scored all of its points in the first half and then withstood a strong second half attack by Tech. Tulane's first T.D., which climaxed a 74 yard drive, came on an 18 yard pass from Bobby Duhon to Turk Evans. Uwe Pontius added the extra point and Tulane was ahead 7-0. The Green Wave then got a break when Tech bobbled a punt with the Wave recovering. The scoring combo of Duhon and Evans then put Tulane on the board again. Uwe Pontius missed the conversion, but kicked a 34 yard field goal moments later to make the score 16-0. The Greenies' final score came on a four yard sweep by Chuck Loftin and Pontius' PAT. The Engineers rallied in the second half, but the Wave held on and chalked up their second victory of the season, 23-12.

VARSITY FOOTBALL

VANDERBILT AND TENNESSEE

AFTER an impressive victory over Georgia Tech, Tulane continued its winning way by swamping the Vanderbilt Commodores 27-14, in a game highlighted by a strong offensive show. The Green Wave's first score was on a one yard plunge by Warren Bankston. Pontius converted and Tulane was out in front 7-0. A Tulane drive later in the first half bogged down and Pontius was called on to try a field goal. He succeeded and the Green Wave then led 10-0. After a Vandy punt, the Wave marched 63 yards on a scoring drive capped by a one yard plunge by Bankston, his second of the night. Later in the first half Dennis McAfee intercepted a Vandy pass, and one play later Jim Darnley scampered 35 yards to pay dirt and Tulane left the field at the half leading 24-7. In the third quarter, Tulane could not mount a sustained offensive drive, but five plays into the fourth period Pontius kicked a 38 yard field goal to put the score at 27-7. Vandy mounted a drive later and scored but it was too little too late and Tulane came away the victor, 27-14.

After the hard fought victory over Vanderbilt, the Green Wave found itself face to face with the State of Tennessee's other contribution to the S.E.C., the Volunteers of U.T. Both teams played well, and even though the Tulane Gladiators came upon the losing end, 35-14, they certainly did not lose any face. By the time the scoreboard clock ran out, our Greenies had racked up an impressive 285 yards total offense. With 1:07 remaining in the first half, Quarterback Bobby Duhon hit Nick Pizzolatto from the 19 yard line making the score 28-7 at the half. After a brilliant goal line stand in the second half, the Wave took over on the Volunteer five. Wayne Francingues and Warren Bankston moved the ball to the Vol's 40, where Duhon took over the controls. He drove the ball over himself and Uwe Pontius added the PAT. Tulane fought brilliantly throughout the rest of the game, but was never able to overcome the staunch Volunteer defense.

VARSITY FOOTBALL VIRGINIA AND LSU

IN the last home outing of the year, the Green Wave took a 10-0 halftime lead, then proceeded to give the Virginia Cavaliers the second half and the game, 14-10.

Once again, Tulane opened the game with a score as the Wave marched down to the Virginia 24 yard line before they were halted and Uwe Pontius came in to kick a 31 yard field goal to put Tulane on top, 3-0. After an exchange of punts, the Wave put on a brilliant offensive march and went 77 yards for the touchdown, with Chuck Lifton going over from the two yard line, to run the halftime score to 10-0.

In the second half, the Greenies were unable to contain the running of Virginia tailback Frank Quayle, who gained 72 yards in the game, falling three short of Tulane fullback Warren Bankston's game high of 75 yards, and also gave up three fumbles to the Cavaliers. With their final touchdown coming near the end of the final period, Virginia was fortunate to take a 14-10 victory back to Charlottesville.

In the finale of the year, football fans were treated to one of the most exciting games ever in Louisiana. 62,500 fans at Tiger Stadium expecting an L.S.U. rout ended up on the edge of their seats until the final gun sounded. In the first half L.S.U. built up a 28-7 lead, capitalizing on three Tulane fumbles. Tulane's only score came on a Warren Bankston run. The second half, however, was a different story. The Wave first drove 78 yards to score. Three plays later the Greenies recovered a Tiger fumble and Wayne Francingues, working from the shotgun, lobbed a scoring pass to Nick Pizzolatto from the three. Pontius converted and the score was 28-21, L.S.U. The Tigers then scored again. After Tulane lost the ball on downs, Schott Mumme recovered an L.S.U. fumble at the Tiger seven and Duhon hit Tom Wright for a T.D. on fourth down. Score, 34-27. L.S.U. went on to score again in the last minute, but only then was the game decided. The Wave played its best football in the last thirty minutes of the season, ending a disappointing fall on an encouraging note.

CONTINUING their strong finish from last season, Coach Ralph Pedersen's Green Wave opened the season with an easy victory over Southwestern at Memphis by a score of 95-72. Captain Dan Moeser led both teams with 16 points, followed by Johnny Arthurs with 13. Three days later, the Wave cagers extended their winning streak, including the last five games of the 1966-67 season, to seven by defeating Florida Southern, 104-72.

The Tulane hoopsters ran into trouble on the first road trip of the year, foreshadowing their season-long frustration on the road, losing to Baylor and Rice. Erratic floor play and poor shooting hampered the Wave effort in the Baylor contest, which they lost 93-82. Moeser was high scorer for Tulane for the third consecutive game. The Wave again couldn't roll against Rice, and lost to the Owls 88-81. Arthurs led the Tulane scoring with 19 points, followed by Moeser and Bob Spurck, with 16 apiece. The following Saturday, at home again, the Greenies lost to Purdue and their highly-touted sophomore, Rick Mount, 107-92.

Two days later, Tulane broke its three-game losing streak by nipping Denver, 85-83, in a game that was even closer than the score indicates. Dan Moeser, coming out of a sick-bed, led the Wave with 27 points. Next, the Wave won the opening game of the Mobile Classic tournament, downing Spring Hill 90-86. In the championship game, the Wave bowed to Alabama, 90-83. Terry Habig was selected for the All-Tournament team.

Shortly after the Mobile Classic, Coach Pedersen suffered a mild coronary spasm and was forced to relinquish his position for the remainder of the season. The team effort was hampered by injuries to Fitzgerald and Spurck and it took five more games for the Wave to play winning basketball again. Georgia Tech, led by Phil Wagner's 36 points, started the slide by dropping the Wave 100-81 in Atlanta. Tulane then played L.S.U. at home before a standing-room only crowd, and the Tigers, led by the magical ball-handling and 52 point scoring output of super-sophomore Pete Maravich, broke open a tight game in the last minutes and defeated the Greenies 100-91.

Varsity Sports BASKETBALL

VARSITY SPORTS
BASKETBALL

ON THE road again, the Wave was upset twice: first by Kent State, 93-73, and then by Pittsburgh, 75-73. Poor floor play hurt the Greenies in both games and the effort was cramped by some highly questionable refereeing. Continuing the loss streak, the cagers dropped a 98-81 battle to Missouri.

The next night, however, the Wave put all the pieces together and upset the taller, heavier Miami Hurricanes, 99-88. Twenty points by Johnny Arthurs and spirited hustle by reserve guard Drew Madar sparked the Tulane victory. The Greenie hoops-tes dropped another road tilt, this one by an 83-76 count to Louisiana College in Pineville, and then racked up a season-high 109-81 victory over the Air Force Academy. Arthurs' 31 points led the way in the Tulane victory. The Wave next traveled to New York to play N.Y.U. and in the first college double header ever played in the new Madison Square Garden, the Greenies whipped the Violets 71-60. Tulane only hit on 36% of its shots but they held star Violet guard Jim Miller to 10 points to pave the way to victory. The Greenies next stretched the win streak to three by defeating Chicago, 89-53. Terry Habig paced the attack with 21 points.

The cagers then traveled to Baton Rouge, where Pistol Pete Maravich, the nation's leading scorer, and some poor refereeing were again too much to handle. Maravich this time scored 55 points and the final score was 99-92, L.S.U. The Wave met Davidson next and played one of their best games of the year, although in a losing cause, bowing to the Southern Conference Champions, 76-68. The cagers bounced back against Stetson, dropping the Hatters, 80-66. This was the Wave's final away game of the season, and only their third win on the road, compared to nine losses.

The Greenie cage team went into the last two games of the year needing victories over Virginia Tech and Georgia Tech for a 12-12 season, and in two exciting contests, accomplished just that. In the rematch against the Georgia Tech Yellow Jackets, Tulane scored 11 straight points in the final two minutes of play to win going away, 88-77. Arthurs with 21, Billy Fitzgerald with 20, and Terry Habig and Drew Madar with 13 apiece provided the offensive thrust. In the season's finale, Johnny Arthurs' 25 points led the Wave to a comeback 88-78 victory over Virginia Tech. Arthurs finished the season with a 19.4 scoring average, the fifth highest in Tulane history.

TULANE teams seem to have a knack for getting themselves overrated, and it was this factor that disappointed a great many fans of the baseball team last year. None, to be sure, were more disappointed than first year coach Milt Retif, who had to face the problem of keeping up the strong baseball tradition that Tulane has had. The year before he arrived, Tulane was at a high, with a 17-7 season and several SRO crowds. In 1967, the team finished with eight wins and 12 losses. Excuses offered were an inconsistency of hitting (.220), teamwork, and pitching (ERA 5.40). There is not too much left.

The attitude of both coach and players for the 1968 season is highly optimistic, and it seems that the team has settled down with the thought of playing some good ball. On the practice field, a bit of clowning adds to the high spirit, work and love for the game that might make this year a winning one. Strong hitting from Ronnie Scott (3b), Billy Fitzgerald (c), Wayne Francingues (ss) and Steve Martin (cf) should help the team score, and field play by Johnny Dalton (2b), Johnny Arthurs (1b), Toby Walcott (rf), John Shay (lf) and Ned Reese will highlight a strong defense. The major problem not only for Tulane but most other teams is the pitching staff. The top Tulane pitcher is Don Simpson, and he is backed by Dave Andignac, Bobby Thomas and Steve Walton. Coach Retif says the team's success rides on how these men come through, and, as of now, it is hard to say. Outstanding freshmen are infielders Marty Donovan and pitchers Steve Walton and Bobby Thomas.

The schedule that Tulane plays is comparable to any major school. Such opponents as NCAA champion Illinois State, World Series Champ Auburn, Kansas State and Spring Hill should more than prove the team's ability. The highpoint of the season is usually the games against ever-present rival LSU.

The future for baseball seems to be on an upswing as compared with the past season. Coach Retif is satisfied with the new school support which includes a rise in budget and improvement of the practice field. Another bright spot is the increased scouting programs that the staff has been able to carry out. They are making contacts with high school players earlier in their careers to insure sufficient talent for future teams. With the first season of night games at home, attendance should equal that of three years ago. The problems that the program faces lie mostly in a lack of student promotion. The crowds that the team did draw last year were rowdy and disrespectful of the player's abilities. Coach Retif feels that support is helpful to the team's already high morale, and that, with help, this season should prove exciting and well worth watching.

IN THE 1967 track season the thinclads of Tulane broke four school marks and established numerous meet and relay records.

Led by Gary Groff, Lionel Boudreaux, Paul Arsuaga, Dick Rogers, Barry Wax, Bob Brown and Malcolm Meyer, the team faired well throughout the season.

In the first meet of the year, the annual "N" Club indoor meet, John Oelkers' cindermen took two first places; in the two-mile relay, the team of Meyer, Rogers, Brown and Arsuaga took first and Groff set a new meet record in the broad jump with a leap of 24 feet, 11¼ inches.

Although the Wave finished sixth overall in the University of Houston meet, they took three second places and made a good showing. Lack of depth in many events prevented their placing higher.

The next week the thinclads played host at the annual Tulane Invitational meet. On their home track they picked up four first places; Arsuaga in the mile, David Barr in the two-mile event, Barry Wax in the discus, and Groff in the long jump. In the Southwestern Relays which followed this meet, the two-mile relay team of Arsuaga, Brown, Meyer, and Rogers racked up a first place.

The final meet of the year saw Tulane facing L.S.U., Mississippi State and U.S.L., three traditionally strong track teams. The Wave took a first in only one event, but placed in many others.

ALTHOUGH the tennis team takes second stage to the major sports on campus, it is able to boast a better record than any of them. Tulane is traditionally on the top in NCAA competition despite the limited number of scholarships that the school permits. Coach Emmet Pare still complains that he is hampered by the fact that he can only offer about one and one-half scholarships each year, but this problem does not seem to affect the team's success. Last year, the team completed the season undefeated, and has lost only two of the starters from that six, Lee Kantrow and Richard Carter.

The coach's perennial skepticism appears again this year, but, as usual, it is largely unwarranted. With Turner Howard, the number one man on last year's squad, returning, this season should be as good as many before it, including several SEC and NCAA championships. Ranked number one and two on the 1968 outfit are Howard and Gordon Traylor; backing them up are veterans Pierce Kelley, Mike Anderson and Bill Dubin.

The team opens its season with Big Ten champ Michigan State. Also on the schedule are Rice, the top rated team in the nation, Texas, Oklahoma and Georgia Tech. They plan to attend the first Tennessee Invitational Tournament held in the new coliseum in Knoxville along with Florida State, Tennessee and Southern Illinois, all of which have large tennis programs.

A player who is granted a scholarship on the Tulane team must have already proved his ability in high school and age-group competition. The time he spends under Coach Pare deals with perfecting every aspect of his game. There is very little chance for someone to make the team by trying out, and most of the players on the squad are recruited from the top rank in their states.

GOLF

UNDER Coach Innes Millar and Ralph Pedersen, the prospects for this year's golf team are no better than the 1967 edition which finished the year with an ignominious 1-9 record. The main hope lies with the three returning lettermen, Jim Markel, Mac Miller and Frank Wells. Backing them up will be Junior Joel Miller, sophomores Andy Milberg, Steve Sullivan and Jim Lum, and freshman Maury Picheloup.

Coach Millar has high hopes for a winning season this year after tying the University of South Alabama at Tuscaloosa and whipping Spring Hill of Mobile. But the remainder of the schedule calls for outstanding play as upcoming matches include such teams as 1967 N.C.A.A. Champion Houston, Southern Illinois, Minnesota, L.S.U., Northern Illinois, Illinois State and Southern Mississippi. And finally, there is the L.S.U. invitational at Baton Rouge where last year Tulane finished 17th out of 19 teams.

So it seems that this is once again a building year for the golf team as Coach Millar waits for the six younger players to develop while the three older boys try to keep the Green Wave on the edge of respectability.

VARSITY SPORTS SWIMMING

THE Tulane Swim Team finished with an unimpressive 3-9 record for the 1968 season, but this most definitely does not reflect their true power. Rookie coach Paul Clifford was able to push these tankers to two ego-boosting victories over arch rival L.S.U.

This apparent lack of depth was hardly noticed in the record books, though, as three new names were written into posterity. Don Kearns is the new 200 yard champ, while John Rouquette broke the old 200 yard backstroke record. Bob Bresnahan reached his peak in the grueling 1,000 yard freestyle.

The 1969 edition of the team should prove to be a little stronger as there were only three graduating seniors on the entire team: co-captains Mike "Tunafish" Goldstein and Don Kearns, and Dave Bercusson. Co-captains Goldstein and Kearns ended the season in a blaze of glory as they both took three first places in the last meet. Returning letterman for 1969 include record holder Bob Bresnahan and John Rouquette, and also Charlie Johnson, Buck McKeever, Doug Williams, Frank Lombardo, and Pete Levine.

The Greenies were particularly proud of their two wins over the L.S.U. Tigers. The scores were an impressive 85-13 and 68-23. The team won its third and final victory at the expense of the University of the South.

A contributing factor in the team's nine meet losses was that six of their opponents were ranked among the top twenty tank teams in the nation, an honor not shared by the Greenies.

VARSITY SPORTS
SCORES

RUGBY was brought to the Tulane campus in the spring of 1967 by a handful of medical students who had played the sport during their undergraduate days at eastern universities. With the help of a former South African rugby player, the team picked up several more players and experience. After a few weeks of practice to allow the team to become acquainted, the group played a team from the Houston area. They lost this initial encounter but came back this year to win three in a row and participate in the First Annual Rugby Tournament in Hammond, Louisiana, during Mardi Gras.

Rugby is a brutal sport, but it is equally rewarding. After each practice and each game, the team meets at Eddie Price's to drink beer and discuss future opponents. The beer busts seem to draw most of the Tulane players.

This past season was a highly successful one for Coach Ernesto Bonilla's soccer team as they compiled a 6-3-1 record. The team was strong offensively, being led by Captain Fred King, co-captain Ali Sahli, Paul Sills, and Steve Ackerman. As strong as the offense was, the defense matched them with King dropping back from his halfback position, Santiago Vilela, and goalies Randy Miller and Chris Green.

This season the team counted victories over LSUNO (twice), Keesler Air Force Base, Delgado Institute, Elgin Air Base, and the HMSC Bonaventure (which thus gained the distinction of being the only ship to lose to Tulane in both soccer and rugby). The defeats came at the hand of Keesler, Mississippi Southern, and LSU. Following the regular season, the team will continue playing by scheduling exhibitions with incoming French, British and Canadian ships.

General supervision of the intramural sports calendar is the function of the Intramural Athletic Council with coach Ben Abadie serving as advisor.

THIS year demanded more leadership ability from all areas of the university than any other in the history of Tulane. Dr. Longenecker was outstanding for his patience, apparent understanding, and smooth, albeit general statements at a time of student-administration confrontation. The leadership of the student body was probably most conspicuous for the peculiar way in which it dealt with uncomfortable circumstances. The standard operating procedure, as it eventually evolved, was to resign. This strange phenomenon was not limited to the student body, however. It was in fact initiated by none other than that "distinguished publisher and noted author," Hodding Carter. In the flurry of resignations that followed Mr. Carter's unprecedented action, precipitated by the publication of allegedly obscene passages in the student paper, it is hard to determine who was the first student to actually resign his position. Most sources point to Jeff Howie for this signal honor. But no matter, the trend was set. It became sort of in to be out, a camp thing, and everybody was doing it. Hank Harnage, erstwhile Messiah to the student senate and prophet of student power, liberalized liquor laws, and N.S.A., resigned perfunctorily after the failure of the N.S.A. referendum in a manner vaguely reminiscent of Socrates' gurgle of hemlock, if you will cast your minds back.

At this point, it seemed that the student body might be spared further dramatics on the part of the proper politicians. But lo! As the controversy over the publication of the now famous Sophia photographs bubbled and churned, the acting president of the senate, Larry Rosenblum, disappeared. With Andy Schwartz (the next in line of succession) claiming to be able to hold out no longer than six hours in this demanding position, the entire student body waited in horror with images of "Jane Rush—President" running through bewildered minds, minds now steeled to accept even Snoopy or Dorothy Ricutti as legitimate successors. But Larry came back.

Leadership was the subject of much debate during the controversy. In the end, the week of demonstrations which accompanied serious discussions about the position of the student body vis-a-vis the administration and the appropriate place for "censorship" on the campus brought to fore some of the best qualities of our legitimate representatives, notably Larry Rosenblum and his conduct at the mass meeting Friday of that week.

At times during the week, however, "leadership" took on quite a different meaning. It became apparent that the term was being defined roughly as "that quality attributed to one who yells loudest and most persistently, while advocating startling and inventive proposals with which to occupy the otherwise idle minds of the uninterested listeners and lookers-on." Notable were Jim Porter and Elliot Levin. The image of Porter leading cheers down McAlister Drive makes it difficult to believe that the people following were actually mature, discriminating Tulane students. One almost expected a procession of floats and barges to follow with flaming coconuts and plastic beads being tossed about with reckless abandon. In the heat of the Tuesday night sit-in in the U.C., Levin went so far as to say that his four years at Tulane had been of no value to him whatsoever, a statement which was taken by his audience to be painfully obvious.

The carnival atmosphere did not obscure the fact that Tulane students were actively concerned about an issue of general interest to the student body, and this was far more important than the specific questions of the photographs.

ONCE more the Jambalaya presents a rich panorama of a college year. In the decades to come this book will help you to live again your college experience and feel the glow of old friendships.

As a record of the year 1967-68 the Jambalaya is a historical document. It depicts people and scenes as they were during a certain period in time. Yet history tells not merely what happened in the past but what has shaped the future. In 1988 or 1998 or long thereafter you may look on these pages and recall how your years at Tulane influenced the direction of your life.

Events of the year have influenced Tulane's future also. Visible evidences include the completion of the new general library and the start on construction of a science building, which will help the University serve many student generations. Just as important in its potential is a comprehensive selfstudy that has involved the whole institution, including a student committee that has contributed valuable observations. From this study, and other extensive planning activities of the past year, will come developments that will prepare your University to meet new and greater challenges.

When you revisit your University—and I hope you will do so often—you will find some familiar scenes and some that are new. But the new should never be strange, for adaptation and growth are normal and necessary. And years from now when you are identified as a Tulane alumnus your associates will think of Tulane as it is then, not as it was when you were here. Keep this book, then, not to induce nostalgia but to remind you that you and your University are linked through a hopeful and productive future.

Herbert E. Longenecker

STUDENT government at Tulane has traditionally, and perennially, been a matter of "much talk, little do": every year candidates have promised to make student government a meaningful, effective instrument for articulating and implementing students' opinions about the life of the university, and every year they have either forgotten or failed to make it such. This year was, to some degree, an exception, for the results of the 1967-68 Student Senate's work were less meager than those of most of Tulane's previous student governments. Of course, there has only been a Student Senate for a couple of years; previously student "government" was in the hands of a much smaller and presumably much less representative Student Council.

Key figure in the past year's Senate was President Hank Harnage, who brought to his post probably greater experience in the workings of Tulane's often mysterious political processes than any Student Body President in recent years. Even so, he often found his plans and proposals frustrated by the opposition or simple indifference of either the student body, the administration, or the Senate itself. Accordingly, after only two months in office, Harnage and all the other members of the Senate's Executive Cabinet announced they would resign at the end of the first semester unless major progress was made in revitalizing both the power and the spirit of the Senate. Some minor progress was apparently made during the following weeks, but the key issue finally turned out to be the results of a student body referendum concerning whether or not Tulane should join the National Student Association.

Opposite, above right: Hank Harnage, President of the Student Senate, resigned after the failure of the N.S.A. referendum. Opposite, below left: Larry Rosenblum, Vice-President for Finance, became President of the Student Senate after Mr. Harnage's resignation. Above, top: The Executive Cabinet, before resignation fever decimated it, included (from left) Gary Barker, Chairman of CACTUS; Andy

Tulane had been a member of the liberal and progressive national student group in 1965-66, but a referendum in the spring of the latter year had ended the affiliation. Harnage had attended the N.S.A. national convention during the summer of 1967, and it was there that he acquired the inspiration to promote the "student power" theme that became a rallying cry throughout the year. However, despite the 1967 revelation that it had been receiving C.I.A. financing for a decade, the N.S.A. positions on civil rights, international issues, and the policy of issuing statements that often did not represent the views of many N.S.A. members were seemingly too much for the majority of Tulane voters to swallow, and the proposed re-affiliation was defeated 970-615.

The night the referendum results were disclosed, Harnage announced his resignation as Student Body President. None of the other Senate officers decided to follow his lead, however, and the Vice-President for Finance Larry Rosenblum assumed, more or less, Harnage's duties. But neither Rosenblum nor Vice-President for Administration Andy Schwartz ever really caught Harnage's dream of a meaningful student government, and neither of them was ever willing to put into their jobs the time and devotion that Harnage had.

It was ironic, then, that the year's major manifestation of "student power,"—a week of protest marches, mass meetings, picketing and petitions over alleged censorship of the Hullabaloo—came after Harnage's departure from office and thus was under Rosenblum's titular leadership. But most observers agreed that it had been Harnage's presidency that had prepared the way for the totally unexpected, totally un-Tulanian phenomenon of a near-revolt by students. In fact, most students seemed as stunned that the long-decried student "apathy" had been shattered as did the university's administration. Whether the new-found student consciousness and concern would continue, no one could foretell.

Otherwise, the Student Senate did manage to pass a few important bills during the year, sometimes in conjunction with other units of that nebulous creature, "student government," such as men's and girls' residence associations. And throughout the year the Senate leaders found unexpected support for many of their plans and goals from the faculty-student University Senate Committee on Student Affairs, and especially from its chairman, Professor Stephen Zeff of the Graduate School of Business Administration. (Another development of the year was the addition of students to several more committees of the University Senate on which they had previously not been represented—a possible harbinger of things to come.)

Among the actions which the Senate took during the year were recognition of the Students for a Democratic Society as an official student organization, despite fears that the radical group might disrupt the university's normal processes and damage its "good name"; calls for boycotts of various local restaurants alleged to be discriminating against Negro students; passage of a "student judiciary" plan, still unapproved by the faculty and administration at the year's end, to increase students' power in conduct and disciplinary cases; approval of a student referendum making purchase of a copy of the Jambalaya mandatory for all undergraduates; endorsement of a plan to significantly expand the women's visiting hours in the men's dormitories; and approval of a proposal to allow students to keep liquor in their rooms.

In short, it was more a productive year than most in the past, certainly (with the March demonstrations) a more exciting and colorful year. Yet the complaints that student government did not really represent its constituents continued, and this failure of most students to take the Senate and other governmental organs seriously, together with the failure of many senators and even Senate officers to take their duties and responsibilities seriously, represented continued threats to the possibility of establishing an effective and meaningful student government at Tulane.

NEWCOMB STUDENT GOVERNMENT

JURISDICTION over student affairs at Newcomb College is theoretically vested in the Newcomb Student Government. However, in dealing with questions of specific concern to Newcomb, the government's effectiveness is severely hampered by a lack of interest on the part of the student and cooperation on the part of the administration, according to the president of the Newcomb student body, Sylvia Dreyfus, "This year we emerged as an appropriate reflection of Tulane's era of apathy. The student government embarked on a special lecture series to appeal to students via contemporary issues, but there was no response. Neither poetry nor prejudice solved the problem, suggesting that nothing can."

"The one ironic question that arose after a year of disinterest was one of Newcomb's autonomy. During this time of serious world problems, the student senate tackled programs of community action. But Newcomb's students continued to view a narrow world, unable to comprehend the complexities of life, and the higher aspirations of student leaders went once again unrecognized. Certainly we could agree with the forecast that 'Someday there will be a war and no one will come.'"

This type of frustration is not uncommon among those dealing with the nebulous responsibility of "governing" a large and diverse student body. Those who prefer to see the results of their toil in specific accomplishments may turn to an organization such as the Newcomb Athletic Council. Representatives to this body are selected from each area of the student community for the purpose of supervising athletic competition at the college. Tournaments are conducted and awards presented to those groups and individuals judged most outstanding during the year.

THE Honor Boards of the Tulane College of Arts and Sciences and Newcomb College are identical in purpose and in relationship with their Dean, but are quite different in structure. Members of the Newcomb Board are elected from the student body while members of the Tulane Board are appointed by the Dean. The Tulane board is composed of eight faculty members and eight students, four of whom are regularly seated on the Board and four alternates. Each Board hears cases concerning Honor Code violations and makes their recommendations to the Dean of their respective schools as to the guilt or innocence of the charged and what penalty, if any, they feel is necessary.

The Dorm Councils of Newcomb and Tulane, too, are quite similar although the Newcomb Inner Council appears to be more administrative than its Tulane counterpart. Conspicuous progress was made this year, particularly when one considers the traditional do-nothingness of the councils. A liberalization of rules for senior women was successfully undertaken this year at Newcomb, the result being a system in which the seniors are allowed to regulate their own hours. Also significant was the extension of evening curfew for underclassmen, the extent of which was dependent upon the student's classification.

The Tulane Inter-House council, the top level of men's residence hall government, was a mover this year also. The Inter-House Council was the body which took the initial steps in the successful campaign to gain liberalized dormitory liquor rules. Another campaign being waged by the council is a proposal for a radical change in the hours during which female guests are allowed in men's dorm rooms and the dormitory lounges. This legislation failed to pass the University Senate, but the door was left open for consideration of a revised version for which passage is virtually assured. The Board of Administrator's stand on the matter when it gets to them, though, is a cause of concern among supporters of the proposal.

A conclusion to be drawn from these developments is that the administration and the students involved are trying to make dormitories competitive with fraternity houses and apartments as centers for social as well as academic activity. If they succeed in this, then we are likely to see quite a shakeup of traditional living patterns, with greater centralization of student activity on campus, as opposed to the present tendency toward fractionalization. The university would then become more of a place to be than a place to visit.

LEADERSHIP
DORM COUNCILS

TUCP

AFTER years of reorganization, of trimming useless committees and self-evaluation, the Tulane University Center Program came up with their best year to date in 1967-68. The quality of the programs, their frequency, and the support by the students, at least, points out that TUCP is headed in the right direction. But that's always been true, so we may interpret the year as a culmination of the due process of trial and error programming of the past years and say that TUCP made fewer errors this year.

The philosophy that produced so many successes this year as opposed to the few good presentations of the past can be summed up in one word: professionalism. Everything that was presented was done with more thought and work than in past years, with a conscientious effort to appeal to the particular needs of this university.

Much of the credit for the overall success of the year goes to the individual committees. This year the committees were allowed a free hand in carrying out their programs by the Executive Committee and although the results attest to the effectiveness of this method it did produce a considerable lack of cohesiveness, which might not be altogether a bad thing.

Another change that has slowly been taking place in the TUCP is that an ever widening variety of students are beginning to take part. No longer are the committees so liberally sprinkled with fraternity and sorority pledges, who are urged by their peers to get involved in a campus activity, and primarily the TUCP, which has served as a popular scapegoat. Not to discredit the Greeks, though, for they have capably carried the whole program for years, but by diluting the Greek's dominance the programming can achieve more campus-wide appeal.

An aspect of the TUCP's programming that helped immeasurably in strengthening the overall appeal was its newly discovered eagerness to mix in controversy to achieve a good program. Mark Lane, James Farmer, and Dick Gregory were the sparks for more heated campus discussion than Tulane has seen in some time. Also, TUCP gained control of the entertainment in Der Rathskeller which resulted in many S.R.O. nights in the campus beer hall. In view of the strength of the TUCP, Greenbackers, a spirit organization founded at Tulane in 1935, became a trial member of the program. As an independent organization it was hard-pressed to compete with the TUCP for members.

TUCP COMMITTEES

THE Recreation committee provides the university with a variety of recreational functions aimed at giving every student a chance for participation. The committee is in charge of all programming in the the swimming and games areas of the university center and uses the facilities for many of its activities.

Some of the year's events included the marathon swim club, the bicycle beer drinking contest, the Sadie Hawkins day hayride, the Christmas ski trip to Vail and Montreal, and tournaments in pool, bowling, and ping-pong. Representatives were selected from participants in the various programs to represent Tulane at regional games.

Events of the second semester included happenings of such earth-shaking importance as the pie eating contest, another hayride, the European plane trip, and a day at the races. The committee also sponsors the bridge and chess clubs.

Spotlighters serves the Tulane student by attracting top quality entertainment to the campus. The committee itself handles all the planning, publicity, ticket selling and back stage operations for its programs. Spotlighters has expanded its operations this year to include a significant amount of programming in Der Rathskeller. The activities of the first semester included a concert by Glenn Yarborough and a program during Christmas week featuring the Tulanians. Club Vague Verte, a style show, and a Bridal show were the highlights of the second semester.

Tulane's Der Rathskeller became a stop on the Coffee House Circuit and enjoyed Raun MacKinnon, Bruce Farwell, and the Sounds Unlimited. Several exciting student groups made their debuts this year in the University Center basement. Another success for Spotlighters was the innovation of Silent Film Nights, featuring old Charlie Chaplin, Laurel and Hardy, and W. C. Fields flicks.

The Cosmopolitan committee is designed to promote better understanding between American and International students. The committee sponsors a wide assortment of programs aimed at attracting a large number of participants.

The two biggest programs of the fall semester were the Fete Internationale and the Christmas Bazaar. An evening of international entertainment and exotic food was offered to a capacity audience at the Fete. Gifts from all over the world attracted many curious persons to the bazaar. Other first semester programs included two International picnics and India Week.

Spring programs offered many exciting opportunities for the Tulane student. The committee sponsored a trip to Mexico during semester break and, later in the spring, a journey to San Antonio for the Hemisfair. Other activities included instruction in Latin American dances and a salute to Norway as "country of the month" in April.

The function of the Fine Arts committee is to provide the campus with cultural entertainment and activities in the fields of art, literature, cinema, and music. This year the committee sponsored art exhibits produced by local talent as well as major traveling exhibits. "Amahl and the Night Visitors," as produced by the music and theater departments, was presented during Christmas week by the Fine Arts committee. The Cine Cum Laude film series was initiated this year with the showing of Dr. Faustus, and The Taming of the Shrew. The committee also sponsors the Fine Arts film series which brings a number of superior films, strong both in artistic value and social comment, to the campus.

COMMITTEES

THE Lyceum Committee, in an effort to stimulate thought and perhaps even action on the Tulane campus, attempt to present programs on subjects that invoke student interest. This has been done primarily through the major speakers series which has included some very intriguing and controversial lecturers.

In addition, Lyceum sponsors student forums for debate and individual expression of thought. Speakers on specialized topics are often presented, taking advantage of speaking talent so readily available from the New Orleans area. During this past year, Lyceum has sponsored several speakers of national prominence in an effort to attract more students to its programs. While this has lessened the number of speakers, the quality of lectures and the improved student interest attests to the success of Lyceum's programs.

The Lagniappes Committee maintains as its goal to provide the Tulane student with "a little extra" in the way of social life. With this goal in mind, they have presented a number of events this past year, including the annual Homecoming Dance held at the Municipal Auditorium with Every Mother's Son and Yesterday's Children, the Freshman Orientation Open House featuring the Olympia Brass Band's delightful brand of New Orleans' street jazz, and the Freshman Orientation dance complete with a light show and other attempts at psychedelia.

In the second semester, Lagniappes had the opportunity to initiate a new university ruling regarding liquor on campus. At the Campus Lover Dance in February, students were allowed to bring their own liquor. The dance was successful and the B. Y. O. L. ruling embarked with an optimistic beginning. In the spring, Lagniappes held numerous Friday afternoon TGIF's helping to promote Spring Fever.

The Hospitality Committee is the official host for the Tulane University Center Program. In order to make campus guests and visitors feel welcome and at ease, the committee provides receptions and tours of the campus. For members of the university, the committee sponsors occasional coffee nights, and for the children of students, staff, and faculty members, gives an annual Christmas party. A travel map, placed by the Hospitality Committee, hangs in the University Center and aids students in finding transportation for the holidays.

Padohad is the segment at the University Center Program that is responsible for the advertising of events of the other committees. In advertising these events the committee was able to produce some splendid banners. Also significant was the return to the traditional "Hanging of the Green" in which real greenery was displayed in the University Center. Padohad also took on the function of policing the U. C. to see that old posters and advertisements did not clutter the building.

Greenbackers, one of the oldest organizations on campus, is the spirit club of Tulane. Originally an independent organization, Greenbackers recently affiliated with the University Center Program. This past year, Greenbackers has helped sponsor bonfires, team send-offs, and spirit dances. Other events have been a lecture by Coach Pittman and the Tulane-L.S.U. football game film. Greenbackers awards plaques to all the senior basketball players and, in addition makes posters and banners publicizing all athletic contests. A notable addition this year to the Greenbackers' spirit was a twelve-foot Green Wave acquired for display at games.

ACADEMIC excellence is ostensibly one of the goals towards which Tulane strives. The Harvard of the South is now a little tarnished by the encroachment of Berkley on the Bayous, but both comparisons evoke images of intelligent people doing intelligent, albeit often incomprehensible, things; of faculty expounding exciting ideas and students listening and reacting.

The comparison is not valid except in limited areas. Medicine is unquestionably Tulane's claim to international recognition. But this has served to justify the concept held by some that Tulane is a "pre-med" school filled with aspiring young physicians-to-be. The theatre department, though small (and some say getting smaller), is still one of the better in the nation. The math department is internationally known for its topological research. Due to the performance of its graduates, the School of Architecture has come to be regarded as probably the finest in the South and is certainly well respected throughout the nation. The students in the other divisions of the university think of it more as a home for itinerant hippies and a hotbed of radical campus activity, an impression not altered by the appearance of certain peculiar contraptions from time to time in front of Stanley Thomas Hall. The architecture students claim to be demonstrating their individuality and crying out for some kind of recognition, if only laughter. The Business School, long acknowledged a fine institution by those involved in business education, is becoming prominent in managerial circles as well. The Graduate School has grown quite large, but has not established itself as an identifiable unit. It appears to the outsider a collection of odds and ends in both faculty and facilities. This may not be the case, but it certainly seems so.

The knowledge, then, is there to be imparted. At least in some places on campus. Yet there is not the reaction that you might expect from a "Harvard of the South." It seems that no one is really enthusiastic about his classes. This surely is a generalization. Many are not enthused. Many students find that the most important thing to consider when registering for a course is the time it is offered (the later the better) and the days it is available (MWF is best, TTS, undesirable, especially S.) along with the percentage of A's given in past years.

But it happens that once in a while, the right hour, MWF, and a great teacher all come together to produce one of those rare courses that are interesting, exciting, probing; in short, worthwhile. It might be Bailkey's western civ. or Irion's psychology, or maybe Sanzenbach's French. No matter; it happened, and everyone is happy, student, teacher, IBM machine, Mom and Dad. These are the students who learn.

What is unfortunate is that these courses are discovered by accident; they are the exception to the rule, and the rule is pretty dull. And it will be so long as there is no way to recognize those teachers who make going to class in the morning something more than a chore. A mechanism for this type of recognition was proposed this past year by some members of the student senate in the form of a course evaluation to be produced annually by students and published in the hope that those teachers who actually taught would find their classrooms full to the point of overflowing, while those who found three students in attendance on opening day would take time to find out why.

It is hoped that something of this nature will be done.

CLASSES
SCHOOL OF ARCHITECTURE

FOR many architecture freshmen, the first real contact they have with the subject comes with their first design class, and what an initial contact they receive, for there to greet them is first year design professor, Robert Schenker. For the weak-willed and for those who feel that their opinions are equivalent to the professors', a week with Professor Schenker is a long remembered experience. Having no tolerance for some of the nonsense known to come from young architects, Schenker quickly sets the record straight by letting his students know that they know very little, if anything at all about architecture, and for them to learn, it will take more absolute dedication and hard work than they ever believed possible.

Professor Schenker, who graduated from Columbia, has taught design at Tulane since 1954. He also teaches a fourth year course on the theory of architecture. Not a man of many words, Professor Schenker's communications are succinct and to the point, letting the student know just how bad or, on rare occasions, how good his design is. Most students are not able to realize the value of Professor Schenker's classroom "modus operandi" until they have advanced past their first year. During that traumatic period the student is much too busy trying to come up with designs good enough to warrant Schenker's approval and living in fear of another bad critique.

Professor Schenker's professional approach to teaching is educational to the student in itself, for after graduation the student deals with clients, the majority of whom are exasperating enough to warrant the architect's considering murder. Professor Schenker makes the young student justify his design in a practical manner while retaining the aesthetics, originality, and creativity incorporated in the work.

THE other design instructor that first year architecture students must learn to tolerate is Assistant Professor Robert Helmer. Mr. Helmer does not hold an architectural degree. In fact, for eleven years after he began teaching at Tulane in 1954 he taught Drawing and Painting. He began work with the first year design class in 1965.

As an artist Mr. Helmer has established quite a reputation in New Orleans as well as elsewhere. He has had one man shows at 331 Gallery and the Orleans Gallery, of which he is a co-founder, and has had works displayed in traveling shows in South America, the Orient, New York, and much of Europe. In 1960, Mr. Helmer was featured in the art journal, Art in America.

In class Mr. Helmer gives an impression of great enthusiasm, except when he finds a design that offends him, something he manages to find with tremendous regularity. But give him a good design, and he is a joy to behold. His comments are usually loaded, either with suggestions, or if it is a bad day, sarcasm. Mr. Helmer prefers to approach architecture, "as a form finding, problem solving activity with the hope that the acquisition of the ability to first solve the problem will arm the student with the ability to face future unknown problems with a high degree of confidence in his own ability."

Mr. Helmer offers the first year student quite a refined source of aesthetic tastes and is a great help in bringing the novice student's design standards back into reality or out of the doldrums. Another great service that Mr. Helmer offers the student is his ability to aid him in their presentation techniques. With the combination of Professor Schenker and Mr. Helmer the first year design student receives an excellent initiation into architectural design besides having his ego lowered several notches and having the opportunity to view the sun rise several times during the course of the year.

ONE of the younger faculty members in the School of Architecture and easily one of the most popular is Professor William Turner. Professor Turner, came to Tulane from Auburn in 1964 holds a Bachelor of Architecture degree from Clemson College. At Tulane he is second year design professor and teaches a fourth year course in Urban Planning.

His youth and enthusiasm makes him a very vital faculty member as these two assets aid greatly in his being able to establish communication with the student. This dialogue with the student is further aided by Turner's willingness to become involved in student projects such as last year's Gentle Thursday and this year's Architect's Week. In his classes Professor Turner is known for his long discussion sessions with his students about particular aspects of a design problem. These discussions are designed to get the student to think about the problem, hopefully in a way that will open his eyes to things he has not realized before. Other of his long discussions involve educating the class on building techniques, basic structural and mechanical rules in construction, and other conversations involving student's activities, opinions of what they are deriving from their education, and what they would like to derive from it.

One of the changes Turner as well as the rest of the faculty, would like to see implemented in the near future is a revamping of the school's curriculum, something that is presently under serious consideration, and the establishment at Tulane of a graduate school in architecture. The establishment of such a school at Tulane would fill a great void in architectural education in the south, for the great preponderance of respected architectural graduate schools are in the northeastern United States.

Professor Turner's refreshing attitude toward students and their opinions and his cognizance of problems in the immediate area around Tulane that his students can experience first hand serve to exemplify not only the vital role that the School of Architecture can play in the University, but also in New Orleans.

ONE of the more exciting and stimulating design professors at Tulane is Professor Wilford F. Calongne who teaches third year and also serves the school as assistant dean. Mr. Calongne has been teaching design at Tulane for fifteen years. He received a B.S. degree from Tulane in 1944 and a Bachelor of Science in Architecture in 1947. In addition to his duties at the school he has maintained a private practice of varying proportions in New Orleans since 1947.

Without a doubt one of the favorite and most respected professors in the school, Professor Calongne combines a tremendous design ability of his own with an uncanny ability to communicate with the student concerning a design proposal. As a result, Mr. Calongne is able to draw untapped potential from a student which results in pleasant surprises for both the faculty and student.

Mr. Calongne's design problems are known among students for the interest they can stimulate in the designer and the fact that Calongne expects the designer to use as much imagination and originality as possible. At times students may feel that Mr. Calongne's problems border on fantasy and that a more realistic approach should be taken. But as any professional architect knows, it is very seldom that one gets a client who is really willing to let the architect use his imagination, so when that rare individual does appear the architect must have an imagination that has been developed. It is certainly reasonable to suppose that an imaginatively trained architect will produce better work than one who was weaned on the design of F.H.A. and builder's homes, Graphic Standard's details, or textbook design procedures.

ARTS AND SCIENCES

DR. CHARLES PEACOCK began his career as a high school teacher. He also taught in a country school where all eight grades were taught in one room before going to graduate school to obtain his Doctorate in Physics, so he has been directly involved with education on all levels. One point he feels the professor must always keep in mind is that while abstraction is a part of learning, people need some sort of model to handle and to reason with. Consequently, he tries to deal with tangible models as far as he can in his physics courses. Students familiar with first year college physics will recall the pendulums and springs that littered the classroom. While it is simple to demonstrate Hooke's law and Newton's laws of motion, the manifestation of phase space of six dimensions and quantum mechanics becomes more difficult. Dr. Peacock manages to bring these concepts down to real terms, to the delight of his contemporary physics students.

Because science has become such a large part of education in the last twenty years, Dr. Peacock feels that all "educated" people today should have some knowledge of science. He likes to think of physics as the parent science, because it is related to all the other sciences, since they utilize methods devised by physicists in their research techniques. Dr. Peacock also is in favor of the concept of a physics course for the humanities. He does feel that such a project would be difficult for a small department, such as the one at Tulane, which must play several roles in the university. The department helps train pre-med and other science students, as well as its own majors, so in the past its faculty has not been able to give sufficient attention to the bridging of such a gap between the humanities and the sciences. In such a course, the mathematical language would be softened to the extent that the student not trained in mathematics could still grasp the basic concepts of physics.

TWO years after Dr. Milton Fingerman received his Ph.D. from Northwestern in 1952, he came to Tulane. He came a day early for his interview and spent the whole day in the French Quarter, after which he decided to accept any offer made him. He spent the two years prior to his arrival at Tulane in the army, during the course of which he was concerned with biological warfare, a subject in which he still retains a vital interest. Dr. Fingerman is ambivalent in his feelings toward current efforts to stop biological warfare and to end secret research on university campuses. He feels that such work is necessary for national security, but would not do classified research himself unless he felt obliged to because of an all-out war.

Part of his adversity towards such classified research stems from the enjoyment he receives from talking about his work. Dr. Fingerman is presently studying the color changes in fiddler crabs and crawfish. Every animal that has been investigated, and many plants as well, have built in biological clocks. Dr. Fingerman, for example, has kept his crabs in total darkness for 44 days, and they have continued to function normally. There is interest in this type of study today because of space flight, and the attempts that are being made to determine what type of schedule keeps astronauts most efficient. Such study is also important for jet travel in which individuals are moved quickly across time zones. After such rapid changes, human biological clocks often require days to readjust.

STUDENTS should take more initiative to come and talk with professors. They sometimes are apologetic about taking up even a little of a teacher's time, but it seems to me that they are paying for it."

Maybe it is this personable attitude, above all else, that has made Dr. Arthur L. Irion one of the most likeable of the university's faculty members. A graduate of the University of Missouri who received his Ph.D. at the University of Iowa, he is one of the most well-known and dynamic members of the Psychology Department.

As any undergraduate who has taken Introductory Psychology knows, Irion is one of the all too few interesting teachers to whom any student could possibly be exposed. No matter how dry the subjects of his lectures might seem — from etiology to Mongoloid idiocy — he manages to make them both interesting and entertaining. Perhaps it is the lively intonation he puts into every sentence. Perhaps it is his sense of humor which permeates into stories ranging from Pavlov's misadventures with his dogs to Irion's own encounter while building a harpsichord. Or perhaps it is his own personal informality which enables students to approach his subject with sharper interest, well-defined questions and much more academic ease.

Eclipsing all of these aspects, however, is still that basic quality of Irion's character — his deep and personal interest in his students. It is an interest which goes well beyond his classroom. An interest perhaps based in the study of psychology, but none the less still a part of his nature. And it is this basic interest which makes him more than a teacher in the eyes of his students.

FACULTY

DR. HANS JONASSEN is one of those rare individuals who combines the abilities of a seasoned and inventive scientist with the communicative powers of a great teacher. There are many fine chemists and a number of good teachers, but the great chemist-teacher (or biologist-teacher, or scientist-teacher) is a bit uncommon.

Why bother teaching chemistry to freshmen whose only interest in the subject is eight required credit hours? Ask Dr. Jonassen and you will get an impassioned explanation of the importance of the sciences in general and the scientific method in particular. "Look at your clothes! The buttons are plastic, the material in your shirt is synthetic. Your shoes may be the product of an industrial chemist rather than an aged cow." After a few lectures along this line, not forgetting the elements of the subject (if you will forgive the interviewer's pun) the passive student has come to enjoy his hour in Richardson Chemistry, mainly because of the enthusiasm Dr. Jonassen exhibits in the classroom. Here is a Ph.D. chemist getting all worked up over the symmetry of the elementary Bohr atom. What student could stand by and let himself be left out of what must surely be an exciting excursion into the world of the microscopic?

Dr. Jonassen has an impressive record: Ph.D. from the University of Illinois, Co-Editor of the seven volume series, "Techniques of Inorganic Chemistry", adviser to the U.S. Department of Naval Weapons, and author of over 120 professional papers.

Hans Jonassen, one of Tulane's outstanding teachers, a man who has made Chemistry and the sciences something more than a requirement for thousands of Tulanians.

DR. FRANK BIRTEL of the Arts & Sciences math department feels that in undergraduate education it is the teacher's responsibility to conduct a type of revival meeting. Dr. Birtel is convinced that the student retains only a small amount of information from the course itself, and failure on the part of the teacher to motivate the student to pursue the study further can be equated with failure in the course. With this in mind, Dr. Birtel tries to conduct a mathematical revival meeting, so that his students could almost say "Amen, Brother" at the end of each hour. He believes that it is important for an undergraduate to see an individual become excited with his specialty and somehow involve the class in his excitement.

Mathematics can be thought of as a real index to the culture of a society. As Dr. Birtel observes, times in history when mathematical activity was at its peak have also been times when general intellectual activity was at its peak. Math departments tend to neglect their service courses to the humanities, often because the humanities do not demand them.

In connection with this need, Dr. Birtel advocates two possible new types of math courses. One such course would involve the selection of a single problem solved in the last twenty-five years, and working back from the solution to the problem itself. The student completing this course would know only a single problem but he would know it in the way a mathematician knows it. Another course would consist of nothing but counter-examples. Since the student would learn no theorems, he would be frantic to find something true in his mathematical system.

If something interferes with your routine, it may irritate you for a short time, but you quickly become accustomed to it." This statement may not seem particularly striking, but you must bear in mind that it was made by Dr. Hugh Rankin, with reference to the temporary (we hope) state of the Tulane History Department, whose classes will be scattered over the whole campus when the familiar History building is torn down next year to make room for the new science complex. This stoic attitude might be expected of a man who has had as diverse a career as has Dr. Rankin. During the depression, he worked in a clothing store. At one point during the Second World War he supervised construction work in the Army, at which time he sustained several injuries which he credits with his decision to enter the teaching profession. After being released from the service, he returned to college and studied history, with emphasis on colonial development in America.

In class, Dr. Rankin displays the same kind of tolerance that he shows for the uprooting of his department. A student need never fear being embarrassed for expressing an idea or notion that might bring a torrent of scorn from some professors. Each idea is explored and reasons found for its validity or the lack thereof. Rankin is one who maintains that no absolute statements can be made about great men from a study of their writings, just as one cannot prove any thing startling by quoting the Bible; there are always quotations supporting the opposite viewpoint.

Dr. Rankin has never lost his enthusiasm for athletics, in which he participated extensively while in college. He now serves as faculty chairman for athletics and accompanies the varsity teams on many of their out-of-town engagements. He finds that this association with young people, along with that in the classroom, has the distinctly desirable effect of keeping him young. Though he values the insight into young minds that his position allows him, he is quick to point out that he does not necessarily agree. But these points of disagreement lead to some of the more satisfying discussions that a student will likely find at Tulane.

ONLY one semester to go . . . the teacher seems okay, but the book looks rough. It averages thirteen squiggilies per page . . . I've fought it and fought it, but I can't get these bodahs drawn right. Don't worry, kid, I've been here for four years and I'll guarantee you that this is the roughest course you'll take . . . Who's that guy with the hush puppies . . . I can't understand it, one page of programming and three pages of errors? . . . What's that, intramural dodge ball, call Ellis, I'm sure he's good at it . . . For homework, do problems 1, 3, 11, 17 . . . 00 . . . I don't understand why you can't integrate that . . . That's all we ever see, ijk, ijk . . . What's that over there, a freshman practicing A's for his lettering exercise? No, I think it's Fiasconaro's transcript . . . What about using a 6 SNT in series with a . . . Just use the tables on the next page . . . That's all we ever see, ijk, ijk . . . Well, first we convert from MKS to Gaussian, then to CGS . . . only a one hour lab course and we're spending ten hours a week . . . Is this the switch? . . . Let's say that our data indicated certain insufficiencies of technique . . . You wouldn't believe the Sociology class in Room 205 . . . Another one married, there aren't many of us left now . . . Which side of my belt do you think this slide rule looks better on? . . . Well, the other secretaries are good looking, but she . . . He recommended it, but if you drop it and then need it on a test it usually sticks . . . you know those guys, always love to get into the nitty gritty of it . . . who got the 96? . . . Somebody open some windows . . . graduation.

Opposite: The last of Derby Day; 1967 saw the demise of this decades-old campus tradition. Due to the "continued degradation of the quality of Derby Week and the increased disruption of classes" all future celebrations and week-long drunks conducted by law students "en masse" are henceforth and forever banned by the Dean's office. Pundits predict a subliminal war on sobriety will be waged again next year despite all truces and statements to the contrary.

NUMBER 179 . . . 180 . . . 181 . . . Registration and a new year at Law School begins. Initially a decision as to which of two curricula to follow must be made. Approximately sixty per cent of an enrollment of three hundred and fifty pursue a civil law curriculum; the remainder a common law one. Since the proportions taking each curricula are nearly equal, a comparative law approach to teaching is used. Of course, a majority of the students are seeking to pass the Louisiana Bar Examination at the completion of their course of study and are given more than ample course instruction to attain that end.

Each student in law school is a member of the Tulane Student Bar Association, and elects the leaders of the organization. Among its numerous activities this year, the association sponsored speakers established dialogue between students, faculty, and administration, help with the self-study at law school, and held several social functions including the infamous Barrister's Brawl.

Important plans have been announced to move the law school from its present position on St. Charles Avenue to the Howard Tilton Memorial Library on Freret Street. Extensive renovation will begin on the new home of the law school upon completion of the new library. The administrative leadership also changed when retiring Dean Cecil Morgan was replaced by Joseph M. Sweeney.

As the semester continues and draws to a close, the competition for Law Review and Moot Court Judge, the two top honoraries, and a passing grade continues.

THE principal event at the medical school this year was the passing of its dean, Dr. Oscar Creech, Jr. His death signaled the end of an era at Tulane and the dawn of a new period in the school's history. I will say little of his career except to note that he was a famous pioneer in vascular surgery and internationally known for the development of the perfusion technique in cancer chemotherapy.

To many students, Dr. Creech was the ideal physician. Though a surgeon, he often demonstrated in the Senior Bullpen a general knowledge of medicine equal to that of an internist. During three years of his illness this amazing man sought to bring about wide reforms in the curriculum while continuing to perform surgery and instruct students and residents personally. By warm earnest words or light-hearted witticisms he constantly strove to make his listeners aware of the coming changes in medicine. He envisioned the physician of the future as the leader of a team concerned not only with the diagnosis and treatment of specific diseases, but conscious also of their social aspects.

For the medical school, he wanted a flexible curriculum in which there would be many means of earning a medical degree according to the student's particular interests and ambitions. In his opinion, medical education had not faced a greater challenge since the Flexnor report and the changes brought by it. He had a dream of the school as the core of a community health center where teaching, research, and treatment would all be integrated in an effort for further progress. To this end he accepted the position of Dean of the Medical School even though he was aware of the shortness of time remaining to him. He might have spared himself the added strain, but he was a completely selfless man.

I am certain I speak for everyone in my class when I say that that which we were most proud of is having been his students. He gave us a dimension in medicine learned only from men such as he, and not from books.

NEWCOMB COLLEGE

Charles D. Hounshell, dean

AS a child, I recall having learned the song "The Old Grey Mare, She Ain't What She Used to Be" — and so it is with the university. The old grey mare is now dead and in one sense the university is, also. In its place has arisen the multiversity — the response to the problems of modern man.

The old university was the proverbial ivory tower — its caricature, the absent minded professor — the contemplative soul who in his pre-occupation with thought had lost touch with reality. The soul, however, who assumed that there was a greater reality, a deeper meaning to life, to man, which could come to be known through the processes of the mind, and the interaction of men.

The ivory tower has, indeed, fallen — and in its place we have a new tower; a tower assumed by some to be the fount of knowledge, a tower, though, which in its assumed heights of glory has lost perspective — a tower, perhaps, reminiscent of the tower of Babel. One would be hard-pressed to argue that the multiversity is not a response to the modern world — to the type of problem which it is assumed that man faces. For emphasis today is on science, on empiricism, on means rather than ends, on the development of tools and skills which will equip man to live in his new world. While emphasis is on development — it is not development of the total man, but only of that part which relates directly to the modernizing aspects of existence. Somewhere in the confrontation with technique and skill, man's quest for truth, for the meaning of life has been lost.

At the same time, it must be recognized that the new tower is not without meaning, for it is a tremendous generator of answers — answers to questions which the old tower never considered. However, this question-answer proficiency is no longer related to the problem of the nature and destiny of man — for man is no longer the center of inquiry. The failure to accept the legacies of the ivory tower and the substitution of technical skills for man, I would contend, are the root of unrest in our universities today. The student comes to us with an idealized conception of the university — one which in this instance is all too reminiscent of the old ivory tower; in its place he discovers the impersonalized tower of Babel. Movements for student power, I would argue, are more to be understood as drives for recognition of the student as a person — as man — than are they to be understood as thrusts for power. The usage of drugs and stimulants is further reflection of his alienation, his sense of rejection by the multiversity. Mental stimulation, creativity, come to be replaced by sensual concerns — a form of escapism from insignificance.

It would seem to me that while both towers have their respective weaknesses, both have their concomitant strengths — and rather than being at opposite purposes with one another, they are, in fact, quite complementary. We fail, however, to recognize this inter-relatedness and as a result assume that man's choice is limited to one or the other. The demands of society are such the answers which the ivory tower overlooked must be provided; the university must be a viable part of the community in which it functions. But, community is impossible without a sense of community, and this can be had only with the restoration of man to his rightful place in the educational process — with a reactivation of the concerns of the ivory tower.

NEWCOMB FACULTY

DR. ALFRED CLIFFORD, who received his undergraduate degree from Yale and his Ph.D. from Cal. Tech, came to the Newcomb-Tulane math department in 1955 from Johns Hopkins, because, in his own words, "they were interested in what I was doing, and I was interested in what they were doing." Since that time, he has found teaching here especially rewarding, and has nothing but good to say of the students. Sample: "I've found that girls can be very good mathematicians, too." Indeed, his only problem here seems to be the occasional difficulty of finding teachers to staff the many Newcomb undergraduate math courses from the rather small Newcomb math department. He is particularly concerned with this difficulty at the moment, since he feels that the end of military deferments for graduate students will sharply increase the problem of finding teachers in the near future, especially in such fields as science and engineering.

A final comment by Dr. Clifford, designed to make the Tulane-Newcomb student feel particularly proud, is as follows: "I'm not sure it's due to increasing selectivity or not, but the fact remains that the quality of students here, both men and women, has been steadily rising over the years. I'm giving my juniors material now that I had in graduate school."

"IMPLICIT to everything people do, is their own meaning. When that meaning becomes open to the biologist, physics teacher, and so on, the university will become real."

Associate Professor of English Brian Sullivan's first year here at Newcomb has done much to help make the University real for many of his students, as much because of his own quite dynamic personality, as because of his wide-ranging theories and interests. Professor Sullivan's favorite hobby is button-collecting, buttons to him being analogous to all that is beautiful, yet ignored and frequently stepped on. "We all have buttons inside us that we'd like others to see, yet these buttons are so often ignored. I'm constantly searching for buttons. When I stop finding them, I'll know I'm dead."

Another of Dr. Sullivan's major interests is psychology, since he would like to have universities come alive with the order present in them in the Middle Ages, and feels that psychology could give them this type of order. He plans next to become a psychologist himself, and, in connection with this, will spend this coming summer studying in Zurich. He is also a patented inventor, as a result of his belief that "if you're artistic in America you have to involve yourself with the consumer world." (Among his current projects: a psy-clock, a sort of psychedelic time piece which combines time and timelessness.) Finally, he is currently working on a play, "The Crocodile."

An individual's ideas may often prove so fascinating as to make all facts concerning him seem superfluous. For those who may nevertheless feel the need to know, Professor Sullivan did his undergraduate work at Providence College, and received his M.A. and Ph.D. from the University of Nebraska. He is currently teaching two sophomore English sections (specializing in Romantic poetry), and the Newcomb creative writing course. As for his teaching objectives, Mr. Sullivan has only this to say: "Honesty and spontaneity are the highest virtues."

FRENCH 325-26 is a landmark course for any major in the department, and rightly so. It has gained its well-deserved reputation, both because of its difficulty and because of the dynamic personality of the instructor synonymous with it, Mme. Simone Sanzenbach.

Mme. Sanzenbach holds degrees from the University of Paris, from the Sorbonne (with a major in English literature, and minors in French and Latin literature), and even a degree in economics from the Ecole des Sciences Politiques. She spent three years as a translator at the United Nations, and taught at the University of New Mexico before coming to Newcomb.

In her own words, the aim of Mme. Sanzenbach's course is to "give background in the history and the culture of France, so that students will be able to relate it to the literature. I want them to be able to relate when they hear the words France, Normandy, etc. The main objective in a liberal arts education is not to have a compartmented mind, or to be walled into your specialty. We're here to open windows, doors . . ." Another area of emphasis in the course centers about a spontaneous type of spoken French. After a time, students no longer realize whether Madame is speaking French or English, and even begin to lose some of their own embarrassment at speaking this foreign tongue.

Anecdotes of French life and history add a sense of immediacy to the fine points of French grammar and history in which her course abounds. Madame Sanzenbach's own vitality and involvement with her students however, is perhaps the most memorable part of a truly outstanding course.

WHEN a professor is promoted to his department's chairmanship, he is faced with a choice between two courses of action: he can continue to be active and available as a teacher and advisor, or he can choose to begin a more passive type of existence, functioning almost solely as an administrator. The former course has quite obviously been adopted by Dr. Norman Boothby, the head of Newcomb's Art department. In addition to his administrative duties, Dr. Boothby handles the lecture part of two art fundamentals courses, and teaches a theory and criticism course open to graduate students in their final year. He also teaches Drawing 2 and even Art 419, entitled "Art for Secondary Schools", a course designed to ground future teachers in the kinds of art activities going on today.

Dr. Boothby has many views about the role of the university today. He believes that the private university should be freer to experiment and to be selective as far as students, programs, etc., are concerned, in contrast with the tax-supported institutions who are responsible to the electorate. He also feels that the volume of education in America will soon be handled by these tax-supported institutions. He is concerned about the fact that "state institutions will support research in science, but the arts still run into hot water if they promote something the public can't accept." He uses as an illustration of this problem the state department's attempt to send American modern art overseas, and the American public's response, which consisted of a campaign against spending the tax-payer's money on dots and dashes.

Another of Dr. Boothby's theories is that the artist's method of solving problems may have more application to current problems than previously thought. In a world virtually dominated by auditory communication, Dr. Boothby firmly believes in the eventual transfer of power to visual communication, and in the great effect this transfer will have upon thought patterns and value structures.

DR. PHILIP BOLLIER, acting head of the English department at Newcomb, received his undergraduate degree at Muhlenberg College and his Ph.D. from Columbia. He teaches a wide variety of courses at Newcomb, including seminary on modern poetry, fiction, and criticism, and a course on the modern novel. Dr. Bollier believes that "the study of literature is important not only as a professional study, but as a way of opening up an individual's life. Literature more than any of the arts permits us to see possibilities we ourselves can't realize. We can live precariously through it, and see what other times and values were like. Literature today is the last major repository of humanistic values the student is likely to encounter, even in a liberal arts college."

Dr. Bollier has many plans for the new English requirement to be instituted at Newcomb next year. Beginning next year, the English requirement will be reduced from twelve hours to six. A new first year course, a combination of the old 102, 201, and 202 courses, will be instituted. This course is to concentrate on the study of the major literary types and genres, and is to be a type of developmental course. For example, the drama may be represented by selected plays of Shakespeare, Restoration drama, and Twentieth Century British and American drama; narrative poetry may be represented by Milton's Paradise Lost and Byron's "Don Juan." In this way, the development of each genre can be studied independently, and each student will receive an additional six hours of time to be applied toward electives.

GRADUATE SCHOOL

AN increasing emphasis on graduate education has been a natural consequence of the information explosion and the development of the "multiversity." The B.A. or B.S. has come to be thought of by many as a requirement as basic as the high school diploma and almost as common. There is even talk that the Ph. D. may share a similar fate. Until recently, almost any undergraduate in one of the nation's better universities would quickly agree that he, too, was applying for graduate school as soon as he possibly could. The graduate schools have enjoyed an uninterrupted increase in the number and quality of applicants anxious to be admitted. This situation may be dramatically changed very shortly.

Due to the increasing demands on the military of late, all graduate deferments, easily attained in the past, have been curtailed, with the exception of medically oriented courses. (One assumes this exception is also predicated on the assumption that the Viet Nam war will tax our medical resources as well as our human resources, an assumption well founded.) It is expected that enrollment in graduate courses across the nation will be significantly reduced in the next few years. Tulane can expect to be affected less than some similar universities due to its large proportion of medical education programs.

In anticipation of this enrollment explosion, the Board of Administrators conceived and executed a program of expansion in graduate education, a plan which may have succeeded too well. There are fears now that Tulane has overextended itself in several fields, one of which is instruction at the graduate level. During the course of this year, a decision was made by the administration that an effort to "retrench" was necessary due to the limitations of the university's financial resources. President Longenecker announced in a letter dated January 29, that a decision had been reached, based on recommendations from three deans, which decision required the elimination of six Ph. D. programs and two M.A. courses. This proposal was violently opposed by members of the graduate faculty on the basis that little actual study had been done in this area with respect to the total economic effect on the university of the departments involved, and concurrently, that the faculty had been offered little opportunity for cooperation in the making of a decision which so profoundly affected it.

The reasons given for this action were, as stated above, primarily economic. The cost of educating one graduate student was estimated by executive vice president Clarence Scheps to be approximately $8,000 to $10,000 per year. One would assume that the cost varied from department to department with the science costing far more than the humanities, due to expenses for costly laboratory equipment required by the former. It is interesting to note that of the six departments affected, only Geology could be remotely referred to as a science. The most common explanation for this apparent economic folly is that the sciences receive quite a large portion of their financial support from the government in the form of sponsored research projects.

In spite of this controversy it must be said that Tulane maintains a surprisingly good graduate program. The school is one of the 50 leading graduate schools that hold membership in the Association of Graduate Schools in the Association of American Universities. In 1967-68, over 1200 students were enrolled in the Graduate School, and the number of Ph. D. degrees awarded reached an all-time high. Tulane is one of the sponsoring universities of the Oak Ridge Associated Universities in Oak Ridge, Tennessee. Through this cooperative association with the institute, Tulane's graduate research program has at its disposal all the facilities of these laboratories. The American Universities Field Staff, of which Tulane is a charter member, maintains staff associates in many parts of the world and provides authoritative source material on political, economic, and social trends in Asia, Africa, Latin America, and, to a limited extent, Europe. Staff associates send news letters concerning their areas, and they periodically visit the campus for lecturing and consultation.

The Middle American Research Institute at Tulane is devoted to research, education, and public service related to Mexico and Central America. It is editing the Handbook of Middle American Indians, and, in cooperation with the National Geographic Magazine, the institute is carrying on large scale excavations of Maya ruins in Yucatan.

Commencing with the academic year 1968-69, the Tulane Urban Studies Center will provide an interdisciplinary focus for scholarship and research relating to Urban and Metropolitan problems.

This was the first year of operation for the School of Business Administration on the graduate level exclusively. With the graduation of the class of 1967, undergraduate instruction was phased out. The School is geared to instruct students in the latest of management techniques, with emphasis on the utilization of computer analysis of business trends. An IBM 7044 is available to the students for their research projects. Another teaching technique in practice at Tulane which is gaining favor in many schools around the country is one which allows students to set up and manage their own hypothetical enterprises which compete and cooperate with one another in an extensive and realistic manner.

One of the significant events on campus this year was a national conference on graduate business education sponsored by the Business School. Deans from 115 major business schools were in attendance at the conference, which attracted wide attention and was featured in several national publications, including Business Week.

TINGUED STA

PARTICIPATION in the activities of campus organizations has long been a good excuse for doing something other than studying. But more so than ever before, affiliation with an organization hinges on more than just a desire to occupy one's spare time. The organization must have something concrete to offer the student as an attraction.

The typical campus club or organization is undergoing a change, a change that is beginning to create quite a difference in the composition and outlook of the club. The reason for the recent change in emphasis stems from the evolution occurring in the university itself. Acknowledging the sophistication that is becoming more prevalent in industry and business, the student must now prepare himself more rigorously than was necessary a generation ago. As a result of the student's academic pressures, the life of the BMOG, who spreads himself over as many campus organizations as possible, is now rare. The general acknowledgment on college campuses that academics takes precedence over involvement in a few socially-oriented clubs, spells doom for the organization that exists strictly on a social basis. Organizations that once had little student appeal due to their academic orientation or professional requirements are finding an increasing number of interested persons.

The organizations section of the Jambalaya is subdivided into three distinct classifications determined by the type of professionally oriented activity involved. Communications involve a final product, something that requires a definite commitment to professional standards to succeed. Editing the Hullabaloo requires a great deal of journalistic talent, but this indeed is secondary to the requirement dealing with matters of taste and style. Anyone can write, but editing goes far beyond that. Managing WTUL is quite similar. Simple broadcasting is one thing, but the manager and his assistants must be able to determine what to broadcast, be able to keep very sophisticated equipment in good condition, and be able to deal effectively with a very large staff.

Entertainment at Tulane deals with another professional: the performer. This type of professional is usually well trained before he arrives at Tulane and is active in entertainment organizations to maintain his professionalism and improve it. Membership in an entertainment organization requires a degree of professionalism greater than any other on campus. A member of the Tulanians can be acknowledged as much a professional as a member of the A Cappella Choir. A member of T.U.T. must achieve professionalism if he expects to do well. Improvement is mandatory in order to withstand competition. If a career is anticipated, the entertainer must work that much harder.

The other type of professional exists in the clubs. Clubs play their largest role with the individual who joins a professional society that is concerned with his chosen career. Serving the student in this manner are a number of engineering societies, law and medical societies, and scientific clubs. All such organizations have a common goal: to bridge the gap between college theory and professional practice. The student who joins this type of organization is not a professional in the sense that a student actor is, but he is striving to become a professional and a specialist in his field.

There exists also a rather unique professional, one who does not have an ulterior motive that can be found in so many other organizations. The member of a service organization such as APO, Circle K, and especially CACTUS, is a specialist in dealing with human beings in a manner not tinged with calculated professionalism, but with a desire to serve.

In all organizations, the degree of professionalism can be measured by the quality of the finished product. The only drawback is that specialization at such an age may cause the individual to lose sight of other persons and their accomplishments, which is the point of a liberal education. A high degree of broadmindedness is essential to real success, just as is a high degree of tolerance and an ability to appreciate other persons' successes.

HULLABALOO

SELDOM in its six decades of varied and vagried existence had the "Hullabaloo" seen either as much controversy or as much change as did the 1967-68 version. Two major disputes over censorship of alleged obscenity made front-page news for the New Orleans dailies and colorful film for the television news shows. As for change, the year saw at least two editors, two advisors, two printers (and therefore two type faces and headline styles), two news editors, three associate news editors, two art editors, and a seemingly never-ending parade of reporters, writers, and photographers.

Throughout the year, however, the dominant figure was clearly the first semester's editor and second semester's managing editor, Jeff Howie. It was Howie who transformed the paper's front page from the traditional hodge-podge of punning headlines, boxes, announcements, and beauty court winners to a soberly-laid-out, straight-news format that was sometimes referred to in the office as The New York Times in tabloid. With executive editor Bruce Egger writing most of the major news stories and going over all the copy with a fine-tooth comb, and with Howie eyeing each page's lay-out with an artist's eye, the paper somehow survived having to operate with a printer in the 600 block of Tchoupitoulas most of the first semester.

When the goal of moving the composition of the paper onto the campus (at the Bureau of Administrative Services) finally became a reality in December, and with its new smaller body type and more conservative headlines, the editors waited expectantly for the campus's reaction. It was not long in coming, for in that first on-campus issue was printed a passage from an allegedly obscene pamphlet that had just been confiscated by the security police. When the paper's advisor of five years, Pulitzer-Prize winning editor Hodding Carter, heard about the passage, he resigned with a blast at the paper's editors. Soon it was all over the Times-Picayune and the nation's wire services. A Publications Board reprimand finally led Howie to resign as editor, to be succeeded by associate news editor Carol Sowell.

The paper continued much as before under Miss Sowell, even to the extent of producing another obscenity crisis. Publication of two pictures scheduled to appear in the first issue of Sophia, a literary supplement, was forbidden by the University Administration, and an even bigger crisis was on, one that finally culminated in hundreds of students chanting "Perish or Publish!" in front of President Longenecker's house.

Through all the sound and fury, some members of the staff carried on with their duties. Bill Rushton and his staff turned out a variety of off-beat and on-beat feature stories each week, while sports editor Kent Brody gave encyclopedic coverage to every football, basketball, and baseball game of the year. Replacing longtime film critic Howie as entertainment editor, Roy Flukinger continued the Hullabaloo tradition of extensive (though by no means reverent) attention to the local cinema. And a largely freshman and sophomore news staff somehow managed to produce more significant stories than the paper had been accustomed to in some years.

Opposite, upper right: Carol Sowell, Editor in Chief, was elected to that position following the resignation of Jeff Howie. Opposite, lower right: Jeff Howie, presently serving as Managing Editor, resigned his post of Editor in Chief following a dispute with Hodding Carter, Advisor to Publications, and the Publications Board, over the wording used in an article in the "Hullabaloo." Below left: Bruce Egger, who through the entire year never took part in the "Hullabaloo" musical chairs, serves as Executive Editor. Below, lower left: Neil Campbell occupied the position of News Editor until illness forced him to relinquish that post and become Senior Reporter. Below, lower right: Another stalwart of the staff, Roy Flukinger serves as Entertainment Editor.

Administration Forbids Pictures' Publication

By Bruce W. Egger

The controversial question of whether the HULLABALOO could be allowed to publish two allegedly obscene photographs was apparently finally decided Thursday by the unanimous decision of the University's Board of Administration. To uphold the actions of the president and the dean of students in prohibiting the pictures' appearance.

Following a meeting Thursday the Board issued a statement saying that it felt "President Longenecker and Dean of Students John H. Sibbs acted properly and with their authority and responsibility in prohibiting the publication of the controversial pictures." "Insofar as these photographs are considered to be obscene and might reflect the responsible student body, the University's administration and the Board is in criminal jurisdiction."

The two pictures had been scheduled to appear in a literary supplement to the March 1 HULLABALOO entitled "Soggy, The Tulane Review." They were to accompany an editorial on "Pornography and Art" by "Sophia" and by Bill Waldron.

When Associate Dean of Students W. T. McCoy, acting advisor to the press, expressed doubt about the propriety of including the pictures, HULLABALOO Editor Carol Sowell asked for a meeting of the Publications Board. The Board voted 4 to 3 March 4 to permit publication of the pictures, but Sibbs announced he would not permit them to appear, notwithstanding the Board's action.

Controversial Disputed
Section XV of the Student Body Constitution, which deals with student publications, has been the subject of considerable debate and revision in recent years, but it was interpreted by McCoy and McCoy Sowell as granting the Publications Board the right of final decision on the contents of student publications. Acting "for the good of the publication and of the University," he said, he took the two pictures to Longenecker for the latter's consideration.

One of the photographs portrays Baton Rouge artist Shirley Rezell half standing beside a mechanical box on which are printed symbolic representations of several parts of the human body, and including some sexual organs, and a series of additional items (e.g., S+3, 2+1, etc.) with the words "Told you so at the bottom. The top was part of an exhibit at the Glass Gallery by sculptor R. B. Smith, wife of a Baton Rouge radio, which was raided last fall by New Orleans

Liberalized Dormitory Hours Are Rejected By University Senate

The University Senate rejected Monday proposals to liberalize women's visiting hours in men's dormitory rooms. By a vote of 14 to 13 the Senate turned down the motion to extend "open house" hours. However, it unanimously approved a plan to allow female guests in dormitory lounges at all hours.

The two proposals had been passed by the Senate's Committee on Student Affairs (U.S.A.) Feb. 20. Bob provided that before the liberalized hours of visiting rooms or lounges would go into effect, the board of each dorm, in consultation with the dorm's reader advisers, would meet and decide what, if any, changes to the dorm's hours should be made.

The main proposal would authorize the women's visiting hours within the following limits: from noon to 11 PM Sunday through Tuesday, from noon to 1 AM Friday and from noon to 2 AM Saturday. Open hours are presently limited to from 2 to 5 PM on Sunday afternoons each month.

Finally members attending the Senate meeting reported that voters were voted over the extent of the change in hours, over the possible effects of increased visitation on the quiet and suitability for study of the dorms, and over "just what might go on behind those doors."

Professor Stephen Zeff, chairman of the U.S.C.A., said that his committee will take up the visitation proposal again at its March 13 meeting and will try to reschedule it for the April meeting of the full Senate.

Zeff indicated that he felt that some changes in the proposal, such as narrowing the range of hours or establishing more safeguards over the decision of the Senate to reverse its decision next month.

The matter would not be reconsidered until the late HULLABALOO obscenity and censorship issue was resolved. The Tulane literary supplement in recent Tulane history, illustrated by two night-time demonstrations in front of the house of President Richard C. Longenecker.

The week's event, begun as a protest by two young staff members over the action of Dean of Students, John H. Sibbs in preventing publication of two allegedly obscene photographs in a literary supplement to last week's paper, resulted in a vote by the Publications Board to allow their printing. The move was followed by a general student strike of several of the University's administration and in favor of student rights.

Intensifying the protests were the two marches to Longenecker's house at Audubon Place in protest of mass meetings in the University Center building and picketing at several business establishments, with which members of the Board of Administration are associated. Directing the protests at first was a group of five anti-administration government leaders and other "respected citizens." The leadership was continually changing throughout the week, with new figures appearing to address the mass meetings or to make plans for future events during the hour-long conferences in the Student Senate or newspaper offices. During the week a general shift away from "establishment" student leaders was noticeable.

Various demands
Various committees and groups of students addressed a variety of demands to the administration throughout the week, including publication of the two pictures, resignation of Sibbs from the Publications Board and an apology for his action in overruling the Board's decision, and a "pledge of the University" signed by Longenecker within one week. Of the demands, only the last one was obtained, the president will address the student body at 1:30 PM Wednesday in McAlister Auditorium.

A mass meeting of students was scheduled for tonight at 6 PM in McAlister. Leaders of the protest movement were expected at that time to renew the demand that permission be granted for publication of the pictures, despite objection by the Board of Administration.

SUNDAY MARCH 10
The protest movement began to organize with a meeting of the Ad Hoc Committee of Concerned Students in the HULLABALOO office Sunday night. Those attending included student Rags-Waldron, editor of the literary supplement to the paper in which the two disputed pictures were to appear, Larry Pomeroy, acting president of the Student Senate, Sylvia Trepanier, entering president of the Newcomb Student Body, Bill Hartman, former president of the School of Architecture Student Body and a member of the Publications Board, Michael Kibbe, a medical student and student leader Rags-Waldron, and HULLABALOO editor Carol Sowell.

The group decided to hold a meeting Monday afternoon outside the building where the University Senate was scheduled to hold its regular monthly meeting. Pomeroy was named the literary supplement editor and Kibbe was named the literary supplement editor. CONFISCATION of two allegedly obscene photographs in Sophia, the Tulane Review, was the cause of a week long series of protests and demonstrations at Tulane as students and faculty members challenged the legality of the censorship.

The controversy over the photographs had its beginning on Tuesday, February 27, when Dean Tom McCay, whom Dean of Students John Stibbs had appointed advisor to publications following Hodding Carter's resignation, advised against the publication of the two photographs due to what he considered their impropriety and the possibility that their publication might violate obscenity laws.

The two condemned pictures were to accompany an article in Sophia by Rushton entitled "Pornography and Art." One photograph showed Baton Rouge artist Shirley Reznikoff standing beside one of the works she exhibited at the Glade Gallery of New Orleans in November, 1967. The particular work in question was a mechanized box on which were drafted several symbolic representations of portions of the human body and a system of digits, the sum of which was noted by the words "TOTAL 69." The other picture showed Newcomb Art School instructor Gabor Gergo seated nude beside a very large piece of sculpture of a male and female figure, both very stylistically represented and possessing over-sized sexual organs.

At a subsequent meeting at which Dr. Edward Ballard, advisor to Sophia was present, Dean McCay refused to withdraw his objections, although Dr. Ballard had previously approved the photographs for publication. At this point Hullabaloo Editor Carol Sowell and Rushton called for a meeting of the Publication Board for the following day (Friday, February 29) and also sought legal advice on the photographs. The editors arrived at the meeting armed with pictures from other magazines and supporting statements from two lawyers only to find that Sophia had lost its separate status as a student magazine, thus removing Dr. Ballard from his post as advisor and placing McCay in the position of advisor, due to his status with the Hullabaloo. After presentation of the case to the board, a vote was taken and recorded 4-3 in favor of publication. But, rather than uphold the decision of the board, Dean Stibbs said that as Dean of Students he would not allow the paper to publish the photos and at that point confiscated the pictures.

On Thursday, March 7, the pictures were presented to the Board of Administrators, with whom, Stibbs said, rested final authority over the newspaper; not with the Publications Board as stated in the constitution of the student body. The Board of Administrators unanimously approved the actions of Dean Stibbs and Dean McCay, stating that they felt the pictures were obscene and should not be printed.

In the week that preceded the Board of Administrators' decision, campus reaction to the censorship resulted in hundreds of students actively engaged in protest. The first act was the formation by several student leaders of the "Ad Hoc Committee of Concerned Students" on Sunday. On Monday, 150 students demonstrated outside a meeting of the University Senate. The Student Senate meeting the following day was held in the University Center and plans were made for the entire assemblage of 500 students to spend the night there to dramatize the student body's stand. At 12:30 a.m., the meeting was on the verge of adjournment when someone suggested that the group march to Dr. Longenecker's home, and almost 350 students proceeded to do just that. Another march took place the next night with some 700 students taking part. On Thursday, the "Ad Hoc" committee disbanded and MORTS (Mobilization of Responsible Tulane Students) was established and picketing occurred at downtown business establishments affiliated with members of the Tulane Board of Administrators. On Friday, the day after the Board's action, 1200 students met in McAlister Auditorium at which time the MORTS leaders discussed what had been accomplished and asked students to submit grievances to be presented to Dr. Longenecker for his consideration in his "State of the University" address.

Probably the one most significant result to come of the entire week was the fact that more than just a hard core of Tulane students demonstrated a concern for a single issue and genuine student activism became a reality for the first time on any major southern campus.

WEATHERING the ire of persons who felt they were being denied their rights, the lambasting from the Hullabaloo, and the vote of no confidence in the University Senate Committee on Student Affairs, the 1968 JAMBALAYA embarked on a year that saw a number of changes not only in physical form, but in aims and purposes, as well.

The year began peacefully enough for the JAMBALAYA, but it was not long before the book's very existence was put to a vote in the form of a referendum on whether or not each undergraduate student should be assessed the price of a yearbook. Proponents said that the JAMBALAYA would realize a significant savings because so many more books would be printed and the JAMB would be able to return the $5,000 allocated it by the Finance Board in the interest of better free flicks. Also, the book would only cost the students $5.50 rather than the $7.50 of previous years. Opponents to the referendum screamed that nobody had the right to assess them a fee for something they did not want. Fortunately for the JAMB the referendum passed, but the joy was short-lived for the University Senate Committee on Student Affairs voted down the motion to approve the mandatory yearbook purchase plan. But fast-talking by Student Senate Vice-President for Finance, Larry Rosenblum, who had sponsored the whole idea only to see it explode in his face, saved the book. The referendum was then allowed to exist for one year.

Much of the work on the book this year involved acclimating the staff to the tremendous changes that were occurring. Layout, a subject of great dislike to all and a department where haphazardness had reigned supreme for years, was now uppermost in everyone's mind. Margins had to be followed precisely and copy had to fit its space exactly. Editor Woody Norwood would not stand for anything but perfect layouts, and Military Editor Ed Dubuisson finally decided that he really could not care less what the layout looked like. Other section editors just threw up their hands in disgust; who ever heard of worrying about a layout? Somehow, though, every page met with the editor's approval although Ralph Wafer had to pull some charettes that made ones for his architecture projects look puny in comparison. The other significant change was the unbelievable amount of copy that the taskmaster, Norwood, wanted. Things that in the last year's book did not rate word one now had to have a hundred words of copy that the editor was sure to reject at least twice before he accepted it. The JAMB staff simply blew their minds. For all photographs on a two-page spread went into one space rather than under each individual picture. The JAMB staff simply blew their minds.

If changes in form were not enough, the purpose of the book was altered more than slightly. Editorial comment was the rule of the day. "Evaluate their existence on campus," "Justify it," "What have they done worthwhile this year?" The editorial comment demanded more journalistic ability than most of the literary giants on the staff could muster and as a result several of the most noted lurkers in the U.C. basement were asked to contribute. The jury is still out on the results.

Photography, the bane of most yearbooks' existence, was a pleasure to behold this year. Editor Norwood doubled as photography ace as he, old hand John Brown, and the rest of the photography staff contributed quality that the JAMBALAYA had not seen for years. Dees, Dee McMillan and Janet McDonnell searching for Pauline had pressure on them from beginning to end. With the smallest staff in years and with such demanding requirements it is a wonder that any of them are still in school; (knock on wood). Each editor had his great moments, like Frogg Myers going wild over his football captions, Dee McMillan and Janet MacDowell searching for Pauline Tulane, Ed Dubuisson and his lovely layouts, Meg Burns' comment on the social significance of a desktop, Neil Howard recording the comments of graduate students as she tried to sell them yearbooks, Ted Kloth calling the DKE's a day before the deadline, Rachele Galanti trying to get a picture of Toto Robinson, A. J. Friedman's attempt at fame by trying to resign, and Ralph Wafer watching the sun come up five mornings in a row.

What the future holds is now the question that looms large in the minds of the JAMBALAYA staff. With increasing pressure from University Business Manager to cut costs by printing a smaller book featuring only seniors, and the question of how the students will pay for the book, by assessment or by choice, coupled with the gross financial miscalculations made by the business staff this year; whether or not there will be a 1969 JAMBALAYA is a question that at the moment is simply unanswerable.

WTUL, "Underground Radio," embarked on its eighth year of operation with a newly decorated studio area and a completely revised broadcast format. Under the guidance of General Manager Ralph Whalen, the main broadcast and news studios were completely soundproofed and carpeted, providing work spaces that the station sorely needed.

Beginning in September, the 'TUL staff geared itself to a hard rock, top 55 sound, quite a change from the multi-faceted programming of previous years. The change appeared to be just what was needed. WTUL made tremendous gains in popularity among the students who traditionally preferred the local New Orleans rock stations. The week's broadcast format was designed to coincide with peak student listening hours. Live broadcasting on WTUL started with the Morning Show at 7:15 a.m., hosted by Ralph Whalen, program director Jim Popham, and Lee Covert. This show was a combination of light music, news in full, and complete weather broadcasts. It was very popular until the staff succumbed to the overwhelming temptation to grab another two hours sleep before classes. Personalities contrived by the D.J.'s became regular fixtures on the afternoon and evening programs, T.H.E. Primate and U.N.C.L.E. Roy being favorites. Oldies and trivia contests (say, who did play King Kong in the original?) completed the typical weekday format. Sundays were reserved for special programming, featuring Mark Rorem's "Sunday Concert Hall," "Broadway Review" with Janet Hockert, "The Cinerama Sounds of Jeff Howie at the Movies," and the "Mr. Lucky Show."

Perhaps the best radio program of the year in New Orleans appeared in February on WTUL in the form of "with," a campus-oriented audience participation program featuring figures involved in matters of significant student interest. The highlight, though, was the special "wth" news broadcast which accompanied each program. With humor and satire the primary purpose and a no-holds-barred attitude, the WTUL staff came up with gems week after week. Following "wth" were the original heroes of high camp, "The Shadow" and "The Green Hornet."

The WTUL news staff, headed by Dennis Kahane, managed to be wherever there was news, providing first hand coverage of all the demonstrations, the march on Dr. Longenecker's house, and any speaker on campus worth hearing. Campus news was accentuated, but national events were well covered, thanks to WTUL's U.P.I. news wire. At times though, the broadcasts lapsed into something less than the seriousness the news seemed to warrant. The chuckles that accompanied a report of a mine disaster were a little hard to take. But aside from occasional tendencies to ham it up, the WTUL staff operated a station that could hold its own with any station of similar format in New Orleans.

Future plans for WTUL depend upon the ability of the university to expand the U.C. building. Once the expansion comes, WTUL will move out of the basement into the new portion and a much larger suite of rooms. Something now within reach, but apparently not favored by the university's administration, is FM programming. A ten-watt educational station could be established for a few thousand dollars. The programming opportunities and public relations value of such a station are enough to warrant further serious consideration.

THE Tulane Law Review is a world renowned legal periodical which has been published since 1916. The Review has a wide circulation among practicing attorneys, legal scholars and law students among whom it is especially well known for its emphasis on comparative legal study and International Law. The Review publishes articles on all aspects of the law, notes and comments on current developments, and book reviews. Contributors to the Review include both established law writers and student authors.

The Board of Editors of the Review is selected from those second and third year students with the highest scholastic averages in their classes. The Editors hold down two jobs: Maintaining their position at the top of their class and writing and editing the four annual issues of the Review. Thus membership on the Review constitutes both the highest academic distinction conferred by the Law School, and also provides its members with invaluable research, writing and editorial experience while still in Law School.

SUFFERING from poor printing and even poorer binding the 1967-1968 Student Directory was the object of quite a bit of justly deserved criticism. Besides the sad aspects of the physical construction, there was the discomfoting fact that so many people were left out that an unpublicized supplement had to be issued. To whom the blame belongs is not altogether important. What is, though, is that the Tulane Student Body received and paid for an inferior publication and someone's pockets were much the fatter for it. On the positive side one can point out that at least this year's issue had the telephone numbers in the right places, but beyond that the Student Directory fell far ashort of achieving any degree of success.

Fortunately the publication of the Freshman directory, titled, "Frosh '71" did not share the same malady that afflicted the "Student Directory." The exact purpose of publishing "Frosh '71" is up for question, but it seems that since the school no longer supplied lists of freshmen, differentiated by race or religion, "Frosh '71" was pretty well received in the Fraternity rush offices. Of value to all men at Tulane was the opportunity to find good-looking Freshmen girls to take place of the previous year's model. At any rate, "Frosh '71" was an article of convenience for everyone and did provide the upperclassmen with an introduction to the freshmen.

An introduction of another sort is provided by the "Newcomber," Newcomb's handbook of information for incoming freshmen. The "Newcomber" contains information about the social and academic aspects of Newcomb, a long list of rules, a description of traditions at Newcomb, and a calendar of events for orientation. The handbook is printed in the spring and mailed during the summer in an effort to have the freshmen acquainted with school before they arrive.

ORGANIZATIONS PROFESSIONAL

BEING a member of a large professional society is one of the best known ways of getting one's photograph in the yearbook as well as receiving a credit line by one's graduation picture, all with a minimum of effort. This is probably a primary reason for the fact that many organizations have a terrific membership on the roll book, but only very few at meetings. In the Tulane School of Arts and Sciences two societies to which this phenomenon is applicable are the very well-known and very popular Pre-Law Students' Association and the Pre-Medical Society. These two organizations every year fall prey to the entire freshman class, all of whom it seems want to become lawyers or doctors. The membership of sophomores and upperclassmen is usually very dedicated, but oh!, those freshman! The greatest similarity of the two groups beyond the freshman affliction is that both serve, almost above all else, to provide help and information to undergraduates about requirements for law school and medical school. Despite the problems presented by the great influx of freshman every fall who usually fall by the wayside by Christmas, the Pre-Law and Pre-Med Societies fulfill an important function at Tulane and as such are valuable additions to the academic community.

Not every organization, though, is plagued by a wholesale lack of participation, as can be attested to by the activities of the Moot Court. Moot Court is quite different from Pre-Law and Pre-Med in that membership is based on scholastic achievement and it is made up of only juniors and seniors in Law School. Moot Court's purpose is to provide law students with practical experience in the presentation of a case in court. This purpose is carried out by the Moot Court sponsored competition which is required for all freshman and junior law students, although on separate levels, and by elimination competition, in which participation is voluntary. Each year the finalists of the competition are allowed to argue their cases before the justices of the Louisiana State Supreme Court.

A rather uniquely structured professional society, the Tulane Business Society, exists in the Tulane Graduate School of Business Administration. The uniqueness lies in the fact that the Business Society serves as the student government of the school, and also functions as a professional society by handling the procurement of speakers and other related activities. The membership of the Tulane Business Society consists of full-time students who are candidates for the M.B.A. or Ph. D. (in Business Administration) degrees. For a small school such as Business Administration this system has been found to be ideal for it provides a unified leadership.

ORGANIZATIONS PROFESSIONAL

THERE are in the Tulane School of Engineering several student organizations whose main functions are to acquaint the undergraduate with the professional aspects of his chosen engineering field as well as provide useful information for further study, financial aid, and contacts with professionals in his field. These organizations are generally student branches of the professional organizations and are affiliated on a national and local level. The activities of the engineering societies usually involve monthly meetings, guest speakers, and technical presentations. Also of interest to the members are the yearly regional conventions. In 1967 the Tulane branch of the A.S.M.E. hosted their regional gathering, while in 1968 the I.E.E.E. will host the convention of their organization.

Within the Tulane School of Architecture, the officers of the student chapter of the American Institute of Architects also serve as officers of the student body, a system initiated this past year that has proved quite successful. Involvement, the key to understanding and solving design problems within the fast-moving urban world of today, became the core around which the A.I.A. built its program. Co-sponsoring a lecture series on problems of urban planning with Help Establish Logical Planning, providing services in cooperation with the Irish Channel Residents Association, and in March sponsoring Architect's Week, a project designed to acquaint the university community with contemporary ideas that are becoming today's architecture.

PROFESSIONAL Societies exist in every department of the university, and essentially they all serve the same purpose: to acquaint the student with his future profession. Usually the programs revolve around a boring monthly lecture and technical presentation and are sparsely attended at best. A solution to the problems of poor attendance and lack of interest is contained in the charter of Alpha Chi Sigma, professional fraternity in chemistry. The solution is that the fraternity exists as a social unit rather than a strictly academic organization. In fact Alpha Chi Sigma deems itself enough of a social fraternity to have an apartment for meetings and social functions and to have requested space in the Greek section of the Jambalaya. Alpha Chi Sigma's attitude toward operating a professional society is refreshing in light of some of the other organizations that exist at Tulane.

In contrast to the social nature of Alpha Chi Sigma, there are at Newcomb College two organizations which can best be described as honorary professional. The two societies are Oreades, Honorary Classics Society, and La Tertulia, Honorary Spanish Society. Again, though, it appears that social activity is the secret to keeping an organization together. Oreades had numerous levee picnics and at Christmas held its annual Saturnalia while La Tertulia sponsored fiestas and a Christmas Party of its own to keep the members aware of the organization's existence. Oreades also was active in other respects as they held an initiation ceremony and banquet plus meetings involving the academics of their organization. In addition to their social activity, La Tertulia was active primarily in pursuing Spanish-American awareness and understanding and hearing guest lecturers.

ORGANIZATIONS
POLITICAL AND SERVICE

POLITICAL activity on the part of Tulane student body was not in evidence this past year, at least not on the level of organized political clubs. Only two such clubs were functioning on campus, the Conservatives Club and the Young Republicans. It is unfortunate that both these organizations espouse somewhat similar philosophies and that there are no organizations that present an opposing viewpoint. In the past there have been chapters of Young Democrats and the Liberals Club, but this year neither club was active. A local Students for a Democratic Society was founded, but there was little dialogue between the separate organizations.

Michael Callaway, president of Young Republicans, made quite a good impression in behalf of his organization during the Student Body meeting held at McAlister Auditorium in the midst of the student demonstrations when he rose, identified himself, and rather than deplore what was happening as everyone expected, gave his wholehearted support to the movement. The Conservatives Club president outlined his organizations purposes as to emphasize the values of Conservatism and the New Right, and in so doing provide the student with an opportunity to become familiar with that particular aspect of the political spectrum.

Just as the political clubs seemed inactive, the service clubs were forever giving their members the opportunity to serve the university and the community. Organizations such as Circle K and Alpha Phi Omega held prominent places among campus clubs due to their effectiveness and unselfish attitudes. Circle K is an international student organization. The Tulane chapter is sponsored by the Kiwanis Club of New Orleans. Founded at Tulane in 1955, the club is currently undergoing a period of reorganization and membership numbers about twenty. The other service organization, Alpha Phi Omega, is a national service fraternity founded on the principles of the scouting movement. The service provided to the university community by APO is not only helpful to the students, but aids charities, also. Examples of the service are the information desk during registration, the airport bus service before major holidays, and their major charity fund-raising events, the International Gift Bazaar and Campus Carnival.

ORGANIZATIONS SPECIAL INTEREST

THERE are several organizations on the Tulane campus that rate commendation for the success of their activities or the effort being made to improve the quality of the organizations that do not fall into a specific category. Good examples of this type of organization are the large and highly successful Tulane Sailing Club, the Barracuda Swim Club, and the Glendy Burke Debate Society.

The Sailing Club's purpose is stated rather nicely. It is ". . . to move everyone up at least one rung on the sailing ladder: teach novices to sail, skippers to race, and racers to improve to a national level." Their activities include weekly classroom training, novice cruises, and skipper's races. Tulane has played host to a number of regattas this year, among them the Baldwin Wood, the Sugar Bowl, and the SEISA Keelboat Championships.

The Barracuda Swim Club is another organization which improvement is the aim of the members. It is the only club activity for which one can get academic credit as a physical education course. The first semester is spent training interested girls a repertoire of aquatic stunts and skills. After passing this course the girls are invited to become Baby Barracudas. The second semester is spent in preparation for the Barracudas' annual Spring Water Show. The theme for this year's show was based on Cajun legends in honor of the 250th anniversary of New Orleans.

The Glendy Burke Debate Society, which is now re-establishing itself as a major organization, carried out a strenuous program of varsity debate and novice training during the 1967-1968 school year. Varsity teams represented Tulane at tournaments throughout the South debating the national inter-collegiate topic, "Resolved: That the Federal Government should guarantee a minimum annual cash income to all citizens." In addition, a team from Tulane faced Harvard University in a public debate on the topic, "Resolved: That compulsory military service in Viet Nam is immoral." Novice teams got experience in tournaments at Spring Hill College and the University of Florida.

The most impressive activity of the club was the hosting of the Second Annual Mardi Gras National Invitational Debate Tournament. This year's tournament was attended by over 100 colleges and universities. Northwestern University won the championship trophy, and the tournament became a qualifying tournament for the national Tournament of Champions.

AMONG several new organizations operating on campus this year, the Community Action Council of Tulane University Students is not only the largest and best organized, but is also one of the most significant and potentially vital organizations at Tulane. CACTUS is not a typical student organization for it is not limited to students; it involves the entire New Orleans community. CACTUS is an active manifestation of the increasing concern the college generation is showing for life in the urban community.

The philosophy of the Community Action Council of Tulane University Students is that a college education need not, and should not, be confined to a classroom. Much insight and maturity can be derived through work in many of the problem areas of any American metropolis. At present, CACTUS is sponsoring two service projects within the city of New Orleans.

The most extensive project is Project Opportunity. This program is designed to help potentially superior students from Alfred C. Priestley Junior High School and Alcee Fortier Senior High School who are victimized by certain social and cultural disadvantages. Special interest groups, tutorials, and special events are sponsored for the student in this project.

The other project is the Desire Area Recreational Experience. DARE provides supervised recreational activities for several hours on Saturday afternoon for a limited number of third grade boys and girls in a large housing project. Its activities include sports, movies, parties, arts and crafts, and field trips in and around the New Orleans area.

One of the issues which is most important to the council is the effect of its projects. It is certain that in present undertakings the task is much easier and the effect greater than it might be simply because volunteers are working with children. However, ease in making an effort is not, and never should be, the issue. Ultimately, it is hoped that Project Opportunity and the Desire Area Recreational Experience will activate and nurture motivation for continuous self-improvement and self-help among the individuals who are served by the various projects. Those who are victimized by social evils must have the intelligence to realize their problems, their causes, and the reforms and actions that their solutions entail.

Although the individuals within the situation must and should work to solve their own problems, others who are sincerely interested and understand their plight are useful, and necessary.

THE creation of music at Tulane is the work of a few gifted and somewhat inspired persons, whose work and accomplishments go largely unrewarded and unappreciated except by a small minority. Tulane makes no pretense of having a band or orchestra equivalent to some that can often be heard as part of the Tulane Artists Series or the New Orleans Friends of Music; but there is neither the money, the personnel nor the community interest required to provide for organizations of such quality. What Tulane does have, and is very fortunate for it, are two gentlemen who are constantly seeking to provide the university community with better musical entertainment. These two men are Professor John Morrissey, director of the Tulane Band and Ted DeMuth, conductor of the Tulane Orchestra.

Professor Morrissey provides the leadership, which in past years has led the band to possess a splendid reputation throughout the South, which, with the performances of the past year, they should have no trouble maintaining. Arnold Broussard serves as president of the Concert Band's fifty members, some of whom also play in the football band and the University Pep Band. Several campus appearances are scheduled annually for the band, the major ones being the Christmas Concert, held this year in conjunction with Christmas Week at Tulane, and two performances of the Spring Concert.

The University Concert Orchestra, which is only in its sixth year, has a varied membership consisting of students, faculty, and University staff members. The orchestra is plagued by lack of support from the university community, as can be attested by the very small audience at the Spring Concert. Admittedly none of the musical selections were noted for their difficulty or other significance, but the orchestra performed them quite well. It is unfortunate that no more than those few in attendance could appreciate the group's capability. Two reasons for the lack of support and attendance might be considered: one, the average Tulane student does not enjoy or appreciate the type of music the orchestra offers; two, there is not enough campus-wide publicity to attract the attention of those students who are interested.

A CAPPELLA CHOIR

A CONCERT tour of Mexico during semester break was again the high point of the year for the members of the Tulane-Newcomb A Cappella Choir. The tour for this year was an extensive one as it encompassed eight major cities of Mexico. The reception the choir received was most gratifying for the Mexican people treated the choir as a professional group and the choir's concerts as a major event of their cultural seasons. In response to the hospitality shown them, the choir felt compelled to present their finest performances, which they did.

The rest of the choir's work this year was primarily directed toward the university community, which, unfortunately still does not seem to appreciate the superior talent that exists for its own benefit. In fact it is interesting to find that the New Orleans community is a much more staunch supporter of the choir than the Tulane student body. Some of the other programs that the choir participated in this year were a Tulane Artists Series performance of Bach's Passion According to St. Matthew with the Concert Choir of New Orleans, a concert during Christmas Week at Tulane, and several other performances involving university sponsored events.

Two choral groups closely associated with the A Cappella Choir are the Madrigal Choir and The University Chorus. The Madrigal Choir is composed of twenty members of the primary choir; the major requirements for membership are an audition and superior ability in sight-reading music. The University Chorus provides the initial training for most of the members of the A Cappella Choir and is under the direction of Raymond Luper, a graduate student in music and assistant choral director.

Director of the A Cappella Choir for the past six years, Mr. John Kuypers is the most important person in the choir's activities. His patience and energy seem boundless and within the choir these qualities have apparently been contagious.

TULANIANS

THE fastest moving group of entertainers on the Tulane campus is The Tulanians, a vocal group of twenty men and women, who seem to be always putting on a performance somewhere in New Orleans. Under the direction of Leland Bennett, a refreshing, spirited presentation has become a trademark of the group as well as has the distinct aura of professionalism that surrounds The Tulanians' performances.

In addition to their numerous local performances, The Tulanians hold high hopes of being able to repeat a four week tour of Germany entertaining United States military personnel at the invitation of the Department of the Army. Having performed throughout the South, The Tulanians regularly perform on campus at Caffeine Capers, luncheons and banquets in the University Center, as well as an occasional football game, and local television specials. The biggest show of the year, though, is the annual Tulanians Show, to be held this year on May 3 at Dixon Hall.

The large repertoire of The Tulanians is still another impressive aspect of their operations. The catalog includes every type of popular music imaginable, from Broadway to spiritual to rock. The selections are largely contemporary, but one of the specialties of the group that remains year after year is a soulfully patriotic rendition of "Dixie."

TULANE ARTISTS SERIES

AN outstanding cultural season was again highlighted by the performances of the artists brought to the campus by the Tulane Artists Series. In the past few years this program has consistently managed to bring a highly diversified selection of outstanding performers to Tulane. The series is aimed especially at the student and a concerted effort is made to procure performers and performances that the students enjoy. As a result, the 1967-1968 Series saw the return of several artists, including mezzo-soprano Shirley Verrett and the internationally famous Marian Anderson. Concert guitar returned also, in the personage of Julian Bream, who gave a concert last year under the auspices of the New Orleans Friends of Music. Mr. Bream opened this year's Tulane series in October. Miss Verrett, a native of New Orleans, who has attained a very high level of respect among her contemporaries in the relatively short time of four years, performed at Tulane in November. In March, young pianist James Dick, winner of the fifth prize at the Tchaikowsky Competition in Moscow in 1966 and hailed by the official Tass News Agency as a favorite of the musically sophisticated audience there, appeared in McAlister Auditorium and gave a concert featuring works by Brahms, Schubert, and Mozart. Palm Sunday at Tulane saw a very moving and beautiful performance of Johann Sebastian Bach's Passion According to St. Matthew as interpreted by the Concert Choir of New Orleans and the Tulane University Choir under the direction of John M. Kuypers. The final performance of the year was fittingly reserved for Miss Marian Anderson who narrated A Lincoln Portrait by Aaron Copland as performed by the New Orleans Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Werner Torkanowsky.

TULANE UNIVERSITY THEATRE

CONTRARY to the rather well-founded rumor that the death knell had sounded for the Tulane Theatre Department last spring, the theatre season of 1967-1968 found the TUT remarkably alive and well. There is no denying the fact that the entire program was very severely affected by the loss of many distinguished faculty members and the extensive reductions in the graduate programs, not to mention the cold shoulder offered them by the administration; but even under these adverse conditions, TUT was able to maintain the caliber of last year's performances with only a few noticeable differences. The outlook for next year is nowhere near as bleak; new faculty members will be added, the old handball courts behind the Navy building have been converted to adequate shop space, and the M.F.A. program will be greatly expanded. Negatively, there is the continually nagging inadequacy of both the Phoenix Playhouse and the Arena as sites for TUT productions and the question mark revolving around the use of the Theatre building as the enormous Science Center rises, only a few feet away.

The TUT season was initiated this year by Samuel Beckett's tragi-comedy Waiting for Godot. Requiring only five actors, the play was ideal for use by TUT, whose idea it was to start the season with its best foot forward. In doing this, TUT was eminently successful. Luis Barroso as Vladimir headed the outstanding performances given by the cast in this "theatre of the absurd" play, just as director Sydney James' interpretation and resulting treatment of the play was outstanding in its own right.

The next production, the classical Greek Tragedy Oedipus Rex was in some respects deficient to Godot, but in other respects was markedly superior. A very ritualistic interpretation of the Sophoclean work, much like a performance the Greeks themselves would have staged, was the result of the interpretation by Director George W. Hendrickson. Both the set and the costumes reinforced the ritualism of the production. The stage design corresponded to the traditional Greek amphitheatre, and the robes and masks of the TUT actors closely resembled those of the Greek theatre. Among the most outstanding aspects of the production was the dancing by the chorus and the lighting which accompanied it. Glynn Peterson as Oedipus gave a very intense performance, one that seemed to satisfy precisely the demands placed by the tone of the production. The rest of the performance, although certainly not sub-par in any sense of the word, could not match the efforts of Mr. Peterson or the chorus.

A highlight of the year's major season was the collaboration of TUT and Campus Nite in the production of Sandy Wilson's delightful spoof of the twenties, The Boy Friend. The collaboration was the result of each organization's mutual desire for increased professional quality in the productions and TUT's forced emphasis on undergraduates bearing the brunt of the season's work. The result was a resounding success, a record-breaking attendance, and the first time Campus Nite ever showed a profit.

A MUSICAL COMEDY
OF THE 1920'S

A GROUP of Tulane students who worked diligently through the recent campus upheaval, and for weeks before that, showed their work to the public Thursday night. Their labor of love is the annual Tulane Campus Nite production of Sandy Wilson's "The Boy Friend"—which in a word is marvelous. With assists from the Tulane Theatre Department (which is working with the Campus Nite group, for the first time in the latter's 19-year history), the group mounted a handsome, resoundingly alive production of the musical which first brought Julie Andrews fame on Broadway in 1954.

"The Boy Friend" is a satire of those sudsy Viennese operettas of the post World War I era, set to the boo-boo-pa-doo music of the Roaring 20's. The plot, such as it is, revolves around the unhappy love life of an English heiress attending an exclusive finishing school on the French Riviera. But it is hardly the pastry thin plot, (as delightfully satirical as it is) which makes "The Boy Friend" captivating entertainment. Rather it is Wilson's bouncing score and the numerous dance numbers to which it gives rise that are the musical's strongest features. In these musical numbers the Tulane production is particularly blessed, for the standout attractions of the show are the choreography of Diane Laizer Carney and the dancing of Robbie Hoffman and Tedd Carrere. Mrs. Carney has devised any number of clever and athletic Charlestons, black bottoms, and tangos and trained her dancers to execute them with an infectious abandon.

Space does not permit the praise that is due each of the persons responsible for the triumph on view on the Tulane stage. Let it suffice to say that one would do well to pick up a pair of tickets and present himself at Dixon Hall before 8 p.m. Friday, Saturday or Sunday to be splendidly entertained.

Below: Boys and Girls of the "The Boy Friend" singing "The Riviera" on the Terrace of the Cafe Pataplon in act three. Bottom left: Robbie Hoffman (Maisie) and Tedd Carrere (Bobby Van Heusen) gayly romp their way through "Won't You Charleston With Me," one of the highpoints of the production. Bottom right: John Barrett (Tony) and Elizabeth Wright (Polly) sing "I Could Be Happy with You" near the end of the first act.

JUST as the 1967-68 school year was one of transition and maturation for the entire student body, so it was for the Greek system. Fraternity men and sorority women were, as usual, major factors in all phases of student activity, and this year, for a welcome change, seemed to take their responsibilities as student leaders first and their Greek affiliations second. This year will be remembered as the year that the Tulane student body finally came of age in terms of awareness of its own position in the university structure, and individual Greeks, if not the system itself, were instrumental in bringing about this awareness.

The Tulane Pan-Hellenic Council, the coordinating body of the university's eighteen social fraternities, and the Newcomb Pan-Hellenic Council, which performs the same function for the nine sororities, also engaged in activities more progressive than in the years past. In addition to sponsoring the usual athletic tournaments and supervising the parties and formals that some people take to be the only activities in which Greeks take part, the fraternities co-sponsored with the Lyceum Committee Mark Lane's well-received address, "Who Really Killed President Kennedy", and participated in the community-wide March of Dimes charity drive. In addition, the fraternities, for the eighteenth consecutive year, put on Help Day, instituted in 1951 as a replacement for the traditional Hell Week hazing period, this year placed over 400 men at 40 community service centers in and around the New Orleans area.

Another highlight of this year's Greek Week was the Initiation Banquet, where the featured speaker was Barry D. Siegel, Executive Secretary of Zeta Beta Tau. The Pan-Hellenic Dance, usually the climax of Greek Week activities, was delayed this year because of a conflict of dates with pre-Mardi Gras celebrations, and was held in mid-March. Music by the New Error and presentation of the Miss Pauline Tulane Beauty Court highlighted the dance.

This year was a year of self study for the university and the structure of the Greek system received a good deal of attention. Racial and religious discrimination, the sorority quota, and recommendation restrictions and other alleged faults of the Greeks were carefully examined by the self-study committee of the Student Senate and by subcommittees of the University Senate Committee on Student Affairs and their recommendations, still not complete, will probably bring about changes in some long standing and traditional institutions, starting with the timing of rush week.

Communications, or the lack of same, was a major problem this year for the Greek system, as well as for the rest of the university. The Pan-Hellenic councils transmitted their views and ideas on relevant issues to the various Student and Faculty Senate committees interested in Greek problems mainly by rumor, and the same was true for messages in the other direction. The major identifying characteristic of any discussion on the various problems that beset the fraternities and sororities this year was that at least one and usually both parties involved were either misinformed or simply confused about what he spoke.

The changes that began this year will probably continue until all of the fraternities and sororities and their critics are satisfied or understand each other reasonably well. At that point, it may be clear that the Greek organizations are acting in conjunction with, rather than in opposition to, the academic institutions of the university in developing a fully educated individual.

THE draft. The Army. Volunteer? Protest? Burn my draft card? Join ROTC? Join ROTC . . . But my draft card would burn so nicely. I don't want to shoot anyone, and I certainly don't want to be shot. But still, if I have to go, I could join ROTC. I could be an officer instead of a foxhole private.

Remember a few years back when there was a serious talk of abolishing the draft? Today, as the death toll increases in Viet Nam, the war has come close to home. A young widow was awarded her dead husband's medals on the U.C. drill field. A memorial service was held for a former cadet brigade commander who was killed in combat. Thursdays on the quad no longer seem quite so gentle.

Military training at Tulane has indeed been changing in response to the growing commitment of U.S. might in the world. Students who enroll in ROTC to get an A find out that mediocre efforts get C's and D's or even an F instead. An F in ROTC? What are they trying to do, teach?

Teach. This has always been a problem. ROTC is still considered by most students to be a course unlike any other they might take. This it is, in part, and yet ROTC is nevertheless a course of instruction. A course ultimately designed to produce officers capable of knowing what to do, how to react and to lead. And Tulane ROTC instructors are no longer satisfied with yesterday's complacency. Old methods of training are still around. Change is difficult, but it is being made.

The Navy has been least affected by this shift in attitude. They have always taken themselves seriously, and for good reason. The majority of the advanced corps cadets are on full scholarship and contemplating a career in the Navy or Marine Corps. It's a lot easier to get into Tulane than it is to get a Naval scholarship. How about that?

As the largest unit on campus, the Army has been plagued by mediocrity. It's A's and B's have kept people in school who might otherwise be in Asian rice-paddies. Now, with practically a complete change of staff, the quality of the program has been on the upswing. Jocks are no longer finding themselves getting good grades so easily. Seniors who graduate are now fairly capable people who leave a securer impression about who is defending the country.

Air Force ROTC has had its troubles, as well, but it, too, is attempting to provide a better training program. As in the other branches, Air Force has started a four-year scholarship program to provide each student a more personal involvement in ROTC. As an advanced corps cadet the student can obtain training for a private pilot's license. New leaders in Air Force ROTC, as in the two other branches, are seeking new ways to improve, to better train potential leaders of men from the peculiar strain of raw material that the Tulane student happens to be.

The ROTC program is caught in a period which demands action. The war has intensified public scrutiny of the military in general, and student's scrutiny of Tulane ROTC in particular. Protestors protest, but the object of their scorn must no longer be a substandard course of instruction. The legitimacy of Lyndon's war is indeed a fit topic for student debate, but the quality of the program preparing men for this war should be as far above reproach as possible. Tulane ROTC has fallen short of this standard until recently, but the effort to improve has become increasingly evident. If joining ROTC is part of a personal solution to the military obligation, then you might find that it makes a little more sense to haul a rifle around the campus than it has in the past. A lot of the triteness is still there, but new improvements and advantages are there also.

MILITARY

NAVY ROTC

THE Naval ROTC unit at Tulane was founded on June 3, 1938, marking 1967 as the Silver Anniversary of the class of '42, Tulane's first NROTC graduates. In its twenty-five years on campus, Navy ROTC has contributed approximately 1,136 commissioned officers to the Navy and Marine Corps.

On October 28, of this year in conjunction with the Tulane Homecoming activities, the crew of '42 met to celebrate their twenty-five years as Tulane NROTC graduates. The Honorable Mr. Charles F. Baird, Under Secretary of the Navy was on hand for the half-time celebration of the Homecoming at which Captain Charles Frank, USNR, (Ret.) made this presentation to Captain deLaurel and the Tulane Unit:

"The presentation of this plaque is done on behalf of the four hundred Navy ROTC graduates of Tulane University, who participated in more than thirty naval engagements in World War II, as a re-affirmation of patriotism and faith in the United States Navy, and as a standard of stability, from those who have served and to those who must serve in the future."

The mission of the Navy Reserve Officers Training Corps is to provide by a permanent system of training and instruction in essential naval subjects at civil educational institutions, a source from which qualified officers may be obtained for the Navy, the Marine Corps, the Naval Reserve, and the Marine Corps Reserve.

Among the objectives of the Department of Naval Science at Tulane are to provide midshipmen a curriculum of basic naval subjects which will, along with his degree, qualify him to perform his duties as an officer in the Naval Service, to supplement the academic work of the school year by various summer cruises, and to provide specialized courses for those men who volunteer and are accepted as candidates for U. S. Marine Corps commissions.

McCue, Executive Officer.

MILITARY
ARMY ROTC

1967 marks the twentieth year of the Army Reserve Officer's Training corps at Tulane. Over these twenty years, the unit has seen a marked increase in the number of officers commissioned, with approximately 45 seniors looking forward to graduation this year.

The 1967-68 school year continues a unique policy at Tulane. The Army ROTC Unit at this university is one of the few in the nation which is maintained to train students to serve in a specific branch of the Army. Most of the cadets graduating from Tulane are commissioned in the Army's Transportation Corps.

Although geared for a particular branch, the training given at Tulane also seeks to develop the student into a well-rounded, efficient officer capable of meeting the many different and challenging responsibilities which he will encounter in the Army Classroom work, ranging over such subjects as military law, history, tactics, and transportation techniques, is supplemented by the leadership laboratory, in which the cadets learn the arts of drill, command, and leadership.

These activities, along with the classroom and drill field instruction, supplemented by six weeks of rigorous training at an Army base, provide the training necessary to produce first rate officers for the modern U. S. Army.

AIR FORCE ROTC

THE 320th detachment of Air Force ROTC is one of the three units on the Tulane campus training students for future military service. In the ever-widening field of aerospace activities, the Air Force ROTC program trains its cadets for leadership positions through a combined program of drill, class work, and practical preparation.

As part of the basic training provided by the unit, the cadets are acquainted with the history, technology, and national policies of aviation. Leadership training obtained in drill also provides valuable experience for the cadet as he advances through the ranks of the cadet group. The qualities of discipline, leadership ability, and personal involvement are instilled into the cadets as they participate in the well-rounded Air Force program.

As the cadets enter the advanced corps, they are subjected to a more rigorous training period, both academically and on the drill field. Summer training at various Air Force bases throughout the country is a vital supplement to the program. In addition, the cadets are able to obtain their private flying licenses through the flight instruction program.

Other activities available to the cadets include the Sabre Jets precision drill team and the Hellcat Drum and Bugle Corps. The Arnold Air Society is an honorary and service organization consisting of cadets chosen on the basis of scholarship, leadership, and service. Also included in Air Force activities are two military balls as well as full participation in intramural activities.

College seniors and graduate students

You are on the threshold of one of the most exciting and important phases of your life . . . your career. Your reward for many hours of study will be a good position in your chosen field of endeavor. In other words, your future is unlimited. Why not protect it NOW?

PACE, Pan-American's College Estate plan, was designed just for you seniors and graduate students, to provide a fair amount of life insurance protection at an age when you benefit from lower rates. This is protection that will grow with you. And, we can guarantee that in future years we will sell you additional coverage regardless of health or occupational hazards.

Yes, we know you don't have funds enough to buy life insurance while in school. Most of us at Pan-American Life remember our undergraduate days when money was a scarce item. That's why we have built into the PACE plan a special deferred payment arrangement. It allows you to purchase a nominal amount of life insurance with the premium payment coming due after graduation, when you are located in that first big job.

There's a Pan-American agent near you. Why not give him a call, or write to our Special Plans Department in New Orleans for complete details of our unique PACE plan.

of fashions for

And . . . these fashions reflect the distinctiveness and individuality for which this shop is rapidly becoming noted. Throughout the past year we've discovered, to our great gratification, (if we may speak so immodestly) that young men who know the best in traditional fashions are constantly coming to Maison Blanche for the types of clothing and accessories they prefer. We suggest that you, too, stop in next time you're down this way. You'll find that you'll be accumulating Extra Curricula points for the degree of being well dressed.

Owner of Arnaud's Restaurant, daughter of the late Count Arnaud, founder of the restaurant that bears his name, as well as creator of many famous Creole and French dishes famed throughout the world.

ARNAUD'S—Selected the best restaurant of the South for the 2000th anniversary of the founding of the City of Paris.

Few are the people who set foot on the sidewalk of New Orleans who do not seek to learn the location of Arnaud's and forthwith journey there to enjoy this famous cuisine. After partaking of a notable meal, guests frequently ask the derivation of a particular dish: "Is it French?" "Is it Spanish?" The answer is that it is a combination of the wizardry of the French with the art of Spanish to make Arnaud's masterpieces.

IT WAS the year of the Self-study, a productive year of critical self-examination for the university. We questioned whether or not we had progressed as our aims and ideals had anticipated, and more basically, whether they were adequate for the changing University of today.

For administrators and faculty members, the University Self-study is part of a never-ending cycle. But for students, self-study is a phenomenon that proceeds with each of our college years. It is during these critical years that we evaluate our philosophy of life, especially as it may or may not be relevant to the many diverse aspects of university life.

The most visible aspect of university life is its physical setting, an integral part of which is the dormitory complex. There is impersonality in the dormitory: each room is very like another; the bathrooms are communal; and the community is often diverse. But perhaps because of their communal situation, the residents share a bond with one another, even if only in mutual complaint. The impersonal dormitory takes on a character of its own, reflective of its inhabitants.

The buildings on the campus appear to conflict with one another. The inherent beauty in aging structures contrasts with the rudeness of new construction, rising upward inappropriately, like a flower in the midst of a well-kept garden of weeds. But we are attached to the serenity and dignity of gray stone and red brick that seem more emblematic of culture and scholarship.

Within these buildings of brick and stone lies the nucleus of academic activity, the classroom. Somehow in our value system the classes we take are often determined by the hour and day on which they meet. Some reject this scheme and ambitiously attempt graduate level courses at eight o'clock in the morning, or are even so foolish as to schedule a Friday afternoon lab for honors chemistry. But we are still bound by the university value system which selects a majority of our courses.

The most frequent relationship between student and professor within the university is that of active lecturer and passive listener. Classes become a blur of meetings three times a week, where one sits in a squeaky desk, occasionally taking notes, but more often writing letters or reading that informative saga of social history, the top of the desk. Occasionally we are fated to find a professor who will join us for coffee and discussion after class. And if we are truly privileged, once or twice we may participate in seminars where our voices are finally heard.

In the end, it is the non-academic life that somehow becomes more meaningful to us. We may involve ourselves in campus life and spend four years in the basement of the U.C. writing for the Hullabaloo. Or if our interests are politically oriented, the Student Senate will be our mania. Some will prefer to spend their time playing bridge in the dorm at those ungodly hours when Mother and Dorothy Ricutti would insist you go to bed. Bull sessions with friends about the war in Vietnam or that topic of perennial interest, sex, become invaluable to us.

Social activity becomes an outlet for our tensions and a source of pleasure to us. There are football games (when it's still warm enough for baseball) and the Homecoming Dance that loses a little more of its superficial appeal each year as the student matures. We may spend our Wednesday nights at the Fine Arts film and reserve Fridays and Sundays for free flicks.

Cafe au lait and Beignets at Cafe du Monde on a chilly evening, or a walk along the levee, or running through the Quarter on Saturday afternoon with a beer in one hand becomes more important to us than a week of classes. We learn the difference between the guadiness of Bourbon Street on Saturday night and the earthy simplicity of La Casa's and Eddie's.

In our hierarchy of values the traditional view toward academics is overthrown as we grow older. The innocent eagerness of a freshman's quest for knowledge and "the wild life" is quelled by an atmosphere that discourages enthusiasm in any area. Maturity brings a casualness in our attitude toward life. The senior has not rejected academic knowledge, but has found value and meaning in other endeavors as well.

BACKWORDS

IT IS every editor's want to write something in this space which will serve either to move those seeing his work to appreciate it more fully or to make some kind of disclaimer so that those outraged by it may be told: "See, I said you might not like it in the first place." I can do no more than try to take the latter course.

At the outset last spring, I intended to produce a yearbook which would be something more than a collection of photographs pretending to depict the year at Tulane. I was also upset with the "golden glow" that many yearbooks try to provide, polishing up everything that isn't quite right and not mentioning those things on campus that might make the annual less attractive as a propaganda piece for the admissions office.

The key has been honesty. We (and this is not the editorial "we") have attempted to be honest in our observations. I hope that we have not offended too many people, but those that do take offense must know that what was said was said in good faith and with the understanding that Tulane is a fine university, becoming a better university. We worked with the premise that so long as we pretend that it is a great university when it is not, then we are fooling ourselves, and rewarding mediocrity.

I suspect that I may, through some cruel twist of fate, read through my 1968 Jamb in 1988. And I think that I would then want to remember the year as it was, with a few of the troubles and anxieties along with the many pleasures of this period in my life. I would be disappointed with a chronicle that was all rosy and sweet, and so this one is not, we hope.

In trying to accomplish this goal, I would have failed miserably (or more miserably, if you will) if it had not been for the help of some very capable and dedicated people, who have given a great portion of their year and academic averages to bring you this book. Chief among these is Ralph Wafer, who worked at least fifty hours a week during the final stages of the book doing everything from layout work to copy writing. My appreciation also to Neil Howard for her work and moral support, particularly the purple flowers she bought in three months ago which still sit on my desk. Doug did a great job with the sports section, sticking close to the philosophy of the book and getting his section in on time. Joan DeJean and Evan Soule picked up some loose ends that have otherwise been left undone, and Bruce Egger came through with some eleventh hour copy writing that prevented some embarrassing blank spaces in the student government section. Finally, a tribute to Larry Rosenblum, Business Manager, if such a person actually exists.

The 1968 Jambalaya was offset printed on 346 pages of Warren paper by Benson Printing Company of Nashville, Tennessee. Senior and Undergraduate portraits were taken by Rappaport Studios of New York City. All of the black-white and color photography is the work of Tulane students. Body copy is 10/12 Trade Gothic, captions 8/10 Trade Gothic.
